the meaning of s. 269. 24 C. 494 = 1 C. W. N. 274. This section does not apply in case of omission to take sanitary precautions in a brick field by licence leading to out-break of cholera. A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 140 = 2 Bur. L. J. 11 = 25 Cr. L. J. 586 = 81 Ind. Cas. 74. When the accused was directed by the Health officer of Madras City to remove his small-pox stricken child to an isolation Hospital but the accused removed him to a separate and isolated house, he has not done any act negligently to spread dangerous disease. 38 M. L. J. 80 = 26 M. L. T. 386 = 20 Cr. L. J. 785 = 53 Ind. Cas. 689.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate) charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you , on or about the day of at unlawfully (or negligently) did an act to wit knowing (or having reason to believe) that the said act was likely to spread infection of a disease which is dangerous to life and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 269 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

270. Whoever malignantly does any act which is, and which he knows or has reason to believe to be, likely to spread infection of any disease dangerous to life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The offence here is an aggravation of that which is punished by the preceding section. The malignant intention to spread the infection is part of the definition. Suppose a person having small-pox is exposed in a public street, either to excite charity or because, through fear, he has been removed from a house where he was lodged, the offence committed by those who exposed him would not probably come within this section. Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

271. Whoever knowingly disobeys any rule made and promulgated by the Government of India, or by any Government, for putting any vessel into a state of quarantine, or for regulating the intercourse of vessels in a state of quarantine with the shore or with other vessels, or for regulating the intercourse between places where an infectious disease prevails and other places, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

272. Whoever adulterates any article of food or drink, so as to make such article noxious as food or drink, intending to sell such article as food or drink, or knowing it to be likely that the same will be sold as food or drink, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Notes.—The mixing of noxious ingredients in food or drink, or otherwise rendering it unwholesome by adulteration, whether it be intended for the use of man or of any animal, is hereby punished—Morgan and Macpherson. Mixing water with milk intending to sell the compound is, in itself, no offence under s. 272, in the absence of anything to show that such milk was rendered noxious as food or drink by the admixture of water. 1 L.B.R. 153. The expression “noxious as food” means unwholesome as food or injurious to health and not repugnant to one’s feelings. 21 A. L. J. 875 = 9 O. & A. L. R. 982 ; 83 Ind. Cas. 1004 = 26 Cr. L. J. 220 = A. I. R. 1924 All. 214. So mixing pig’s fat with ghee and selling the mixture is not selling article noxious as food. Ibid.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

273. Whoever sells, or offers or exposes for sale, as food or drink, any article which has been rendered or has become noxious, or is in a state unfit for food or drink, knowing or, having reason to believe that the same is noxious, as food or drink, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Noxious.—The word “noxious” means harmful to health or unwholesome. In the absence of evidence to show that the adulteration of ghee with vegetable oil was such as to render it noxious in the above sense, such adulteration cannot be held to constitute an offence, under this section. 12 C. W. N. 608; 26 A. 387; 28 A. 312.

Scope.—Whether it has been adulterated so as to become noxious, or has become unfit for food or drink by decay, etc., or has never been fit for food,—a sale or attempt to sell any such article by one who knows its noxiousness, is an offence if he offers it for sale as food or drink. The purpose for which the sale is made is all important. Suppose meat to be sold as food for dogs and not for man, it may be that it would not be unfit for the purpose intended, although not sufficiently good for the food of man.—Morgan and Macpherson. See also 3 P. R. 1908 Cr. There is no warrant in law for the presumption that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an article of food would be unfit for consumption and like other ingredients of the offence, this has to be proved. A. I. R. 1922 All. 273. As regards whether mixing water with milk is an offence under this section. Vide. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 49. A person cannot be convicted of an offence under this section for selling wheat containing a large admixture of extraneous matter, e. g., dust wood, matches, charcoal, black-seeds, etc. 6 Bom. L. R. 520=1 Cr. L. J. 618. Toddy in which worms have germinated is noxious and unfit for drink. 1 Weir. 228. In order to convict a person under this section the offence must be complete. 1 Weir, 227. Exposing for sale milk mixed with water is not an offence under this section as the mixture is not noxious or injurious as food or drink. 89 Ind. Cas. 961=26 Cr. L. J. 1441; see also 1 Weir. 228.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

274. Whoever adulterates any drug or medical preparation in such a manner as to lessen the efficacy, or change the operation of such drug or medical preparation, or to make it noxious, intending that it shall be sold or used for, or knowing it to be likely that it will be sold or used for, any medicinal purpose, as if it had not undergone such adulteration, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

275. Whoever, knowing any drug or medical preparation to have been adulterated in such a manner as to lessen its efficacy, to change its operation, or to render it noxious, sells the same, or offers or exposes it for sale, or issues it from any dispensary for medicinal purposes as unadulterated, or causes it to be used for medicinal purposes by any person not knowing of the adulteration, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

276. Whoever knowingly sells, or offers or exposes for sale, or issues from a dispensary for medicinal purposes, any drug or medical preparation, as a different drug or medical preparation, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

277. Whoever voluntarily corrupts or fouls the water of any public spring or reservoir, so as to render it less fit for the purpose for which it is ordinarily used, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Corrupts or fouls.—The expression must be taken in its literal sense and not in its artificial sense. 13 C. P. L. R. 92 ; 2 Bom. L. R. 1078.

Public spring.—The term "public spring" does not include a continuous stream of water running along the bed of a river. 4 M. 229=1 Weir, 230 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 215 Rat. Un. Cr. 14 ; 2 C. 383 ; 6 Bom. L. R. 52. The water must be for public use. Spring and reservoirs are alone mentioned. The provision therefore does not extend to the waters of rivers, etc., although they may ordinarily be used for drinking and other domestic purposes.—Morgan and Macpherson.

The water of a nulla does not constitute a "public spring." Rat. Un. Cr. C. 963.

Voluntarily corrupts, etc.—In such acts as suffering the washing or refuse on an offensive trade to flow into a tank of drinking water, or washing skins etc, there cannot but be a voluntary fouling (Vide, section 39.)

The purpose for which the water is ordinarily used must be considered in determining whether there has been voluntary corrupting within the meaning of this section. Morgan and Macpherson.

There are two questions to be considered with reference to a charge under this section. The first is whether the water of the tank has been ordinarily used for drinking purposes, the second, whether the accused voluntarily corrupted or fouled the water so as to render it less fit for drinking. 1 Weir, 229. Mere angling in a tank is not an offence under this section. 1 Weir, 231 (1) ; see also 1 Weir, 231 (2). The mere bathing in a tank, not set apart by any lawful order for bathing purposes, without anything further, is not an offence under the section. 1 Weir, 228. Cultivating paddy in the bed of a tank used by the public for drinking purposes is a nuisance and is punishable under ss. 277 and 291. 1 Weir 229. A conviction under this section is proper for spitting in a public well. 13 N. L. R. 68=18 Cr. L. J. 650=40 Ind. Cas. 298.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by a Magistrate.

278. Whoever voluntarily vitiates the atmosphere in any place so as to make it noxious to the health of persons in general dwelling or carrying on business in the neighbourhood, or passing along a public way, shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

Scope.—In several of the subsequent section of this chapter, particular acts done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others, or as to be likely to cause hurt, are made punishable. In a latter chapter there is a general provision the like effect (see section 336). The offences thus made punishable are complete although no personal hurt may be sustained. Where the rashness or negligence causes bodily pain ("hurt" or "grievous hurt"), it is punishable under sections 337, 338. Where it causes death, the offender may be guilty of culpable homicide which will amount to murder if the act is of that imminently dangerous and reckless kind which is contemplated by section 300. Morgan and Macpherson p. 209. Section 278, I. P. Code, is directed against a public nuisance, and not a private nuisance. Where the skull of a deceased man was thrown into a private dwelling house and there was nothing to shew that the effect of it was to make the atmosphere noxious, held, that the person who threw the skull could not be convicted under s. 278. 10 Pat. L. T. 87=116 Ind. Cas. 48=30 Cr. L. J. 556=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 113.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Notes.—The act of performing the offices of nature in front of one's door-step in a public street is not an offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 200.

279. Whoever drives any vehicle, or rides, on any public way in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person shall be punished, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Essentials.—To sustain a charge under this section it must be shown that there was rashness or negligence on the part of the rider or driver. 1 Weir, 232; 1 C. P. L. R. 112. To constitute an offence under this section, it is not necessary that actual hurt should be caused to a human being, it is sufficient if the accused's act is likely to cause such hurt or injury. 2 P. W. R. 1912 Cr.

Scope.—This offence against the public safety is completed although rash or negligent act results in no injury to life or property. The cases contemplated in this and the following sections seem to be those in which there is indifference or rashness in performing a lawful act, and therefore criminality, but not in the same degree as where there is a determination to do wrong. If a man is so rash as to take on himself an office or duty requiring skill, which he cannot adequately discharge, his conduct has in it a taint of criminality, and it will be no defence to shew that he acted to the best of his ability—Morgan and Macpherson. Criminal negligence is the gross and capable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. 152 Ind. Cas. 699=1934 Cr. C. 888=A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 194. Driving on wrong side is not always rash and negligent. Ibid; see also 146 Ind. Cas. 28=10 W. N. 823=1933 Cr. C. 1275=A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 391. Speed of thirty miles on straight and open road is not by itself excessive or rash. 146 Ind. Cas. 28=10 O. W. N. 823. Rash driving is punishable even when there is no person on that part of the road. 19 B. 715. Rash driving on a public road causing thereby collision with, and injury to the horse of, another carriage is punishable under this section. 13 P. R. 1900 Cr. Where an accused was found guilty of rash and negligent driving under this section, he cannot also be convicted for mischief under s. 427. 5 S. L. R. 263=15 Ind. Cas. 808=13 Cr. L. J. 536. Where a person allowed his cart to proceed unattended along a road and run over a boy who was sleeping on the road, he could not be convicted under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 198. Where a person is driving on the wrong side of the road at the time of collision, he must satisfy the Court that he was not rash or negligent in driving on that side. 23 Bom. L. R. 358=61 Ind. It is superseded, as regards the effect of sub-section (1 A) by the words the Court before whom he is so convicted in the aforesaid sub-section and cannot be used so as to control those words. A second class Magistrate who has convicted an accused under Penal Code. s. 229. can order his release after due admonition under Cr. Pro. Code. s. 562. 47 A. 353=26 Cr. L. J. 624=85 Ind. Cas. 848=A. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable—by any Magistrate.

280. Whoever navigates any vessel in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Conviction.—To support a conviction under this section, it must be proved that the immediate cause of the accident was rashness or negligence on the part of the navigator. 15 C. W. N. 835. It is the primary duty of steam vessels to keep out of the way of vessels lying at anchor. The fact that a launch runs into a cargo-boat at anchor is in itself prima facie evidence of negligent navigation. 12 Cr. L. J. 582=12 Ind. Cas. 846=4 Bur. L. T. 140. To prove the offence of rash and negligent navigation under s. 280 I. P. Code, it is not sufficient to prove that the accused navigated the ship in an extremely slovenly manner; it is necessary to prove that he navigated it so as to endanger human life or in a manner which was likely to cause hurt to injury or other persons or property. 19 S. L. R. 136=A. I. R. 1925 Sind. 284=26 Cr. L. J. 1026=87 Ind. Cas. 917.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

281. Whoever exhibits any false light, mark, or buoy, intending or knowing it to be likely that such exhibition will mislead any navigator, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

282. Whoever knowingly or negligently conveys, or causes to be conveyed for hire, any person by water, in any vessel, when that vessel is in such a state or so loaded as to endanger the life of that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Scope.—Boatmen plying for hire on rivers, at ferries, etc., whose boats are overloaded, or are not in a fit condition safely to carry passengers, are criminally responsible for their neglect. It should be proved that there was risk to life caused, and the circumstances from which knowledge or negligence is to be inferred should be shewn.—Morgan and Macpherson. Hence of the fishery case also be convicted under this section where he does not take proper precaution to ensure that his majhis did not overload the boats though he knew that overloading is very common in monsoon time. 61 C. 253=38 C. W. N. 200=151 Ind. Cas. 660=35 Cr. L. J. 1373=1934 Cr. C. 696=A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 490.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

283. Whoever, by doing any act, or by omitting to take order with any property in his possession or under his charge, causes danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or public line of navigation, shall be punished with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

Gist of the offence—To warrant a conviction it must be established that the way is a public way and the act of the accused has caused danger, obstruction, or injury to some person. 25 C. 275; 1 Bom. L. R. 517; 11 C. L. R. 462; 25 Cr. L. J. 707=81 Ind. Cas. 195. Where there is no proof of obstruction caused, to a particular person by the act of the accused, a conviction under this section cannot be sustained. 1 Weir. 232.

Scope.—Generally a man is bound to use his property so as not to injure others. The offence here punished is the public nuisance of causing obstruction, etc., in a public way or navigable river or canal. There must be some negligent act or improper omission. Suppose a boat sinks in the navigable channel of a river and causes obstruction or danger,—if the boat was lost by the mere negligence of those who had charge of it, they will be punished under this section. It seems from the terms of the section that there must be evidence that some person has actually suffered injury or been obstructed, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson. Under this section actual obstruction to specific individual requires to be proved. 38 M. 305=29 Ind. Cas. 832. Ordinarily, every shop-keeper has a right to exhibit his wares in any way he likes in his shop, but he must exercise the right so as not to cause annoyance or nuisance to the public. 13 Bom. L. R. 209=10 Ind. Cas. 804=12 Cr. L. J. 258=35 B. 368. Obstruction to the road so as to cause danger or injury to any person using the road is necessary for conviction. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 153=25 Cr. L. J. 707=87 Ind. Cas. 19. A person cannot be convicted under this section for obstruction by his contractor, where he had not authorised the obstruction. 19 A. L. J. 125=61 Ind. Cas. 59=22 Cr. L. J. 331. A public right of way is unconnected with any dominant tenement. Such right may be acquired by user or dedication to the public in general. There can be no such thing in law as a public right of way constituted by dedication to only a section of the public. Where the evidence was not sufficient to support an inference of dedication for the use of the public in general or to establish a customary right of way the accused was not liable to be convicted for offences under s. 283 or 339, Penal Code, as regards an obstruction made in the road. 33 C. W. N. 915; A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 286.

Procedure—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

284. Whoever does, with any poisonous substance, any act in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life, or Negligent conduct with respect to poisonous substance. to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any person, or knowingly or negligently omits to take such order with any poisonous substance in his possession as is sufficient to guard against probable danger to human life from such poisonous substance, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Notice—Suppose a deadly poison is left exposed in a place usually frequented by children. This, like other sections of the chapter, proceeds on the principle that carelessness when sufficient in degree, is to be regarded as criminal notwithstanding that it may not have occasioned hurt. In this and the following section, the offences defined are not necessarily of the nature of public nuisances. For the offence may be committed in places where persons do not congregate together. It is sufficient that the life of a single person may be put in danger.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

285. Whoever does, with fire or any combustible matter, any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, or knowingly or negligently omits to take such order with any fire or any combustible matter in his possession as is sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life from such fire or combustible matter, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Negligent conduct with respect to fire or combustible matter.

What constitutes offence.—In order to support a conviction under the section the following matters must be proved.—(i) rash or negligent dealing with fire ; (ii) this rashness or negligence must be such as (a) endangers human life, or (b) is likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person ; or (iii) there must be found intentional or negligent omission in dealing with fire to guard against probable danger to human life. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 411.

Punishment.—It will be observed that the punishment in this and the subsequent sections is directed against an act which may be dangerous or cause hurt to human life. If the expression "injury to any other person" is to be understood to mean not only a personal injury but any injury (see section 44) a risk of danger to property will be sufficient to make a man criminally responsible for his negligence.—Morgan and Macpherson.

The owner of a house in which a fire breaks out cannot be convicted under the above section, without proving actual carelessness or an illegal omission in the owner from which rashness or negligence can be inferred. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 134 ; see also L. B. R. (1872-1892) 569. In order to sustain a conviction under the above section, there must be evidence of rashness or of negligence of the accused. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 237 ; 1 U. B. R. (1902-1903) Penal Code, 7. This section does not render it necessary to show danger to human life ; it is sufficient to prove likelihood of injury to property. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 134. This section has no application where the act of the accused is wilful and not rash or negligent. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 126.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

286. Whoever does, with any explosive substance, any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life, or to be Negligent conduct with respect to explosive substance. likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, or knowingly or negligently omits to take such order with any explosive substance in his possession as is sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life from that substance, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Knowingly.—If a person omits to take precautions in respect of explosives in his possession sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life being conscious of the probability of danger resulting from such omission, he "knowingly" does that which, under this section, renders him liable to punishment. If a person omits to take such precautions without such consciousness, he is liable, by reason of his negligence, if he "has not exercised the caution incumbent on him" and which, if he had exercised it could have created in him the consciousness that his omission was likely to cause danger. Queen Empress v. Chen Chugadu, 8 M. 421 = 1 Weir, 233. The first part of the section is not confined to cases where the explosive is in possession of the accused at the time of the injury. 1 Weir, 236.

Explosive substance.—A revolver is not an explosive substance within this section. 1 Weir, 235.

Scope of the Section.—Keeping a large quantity of gunpowder or fire-works, etc., in a populous place, even though they be not negligently kept, may perhaps constitute an offence within this section. Any explosive substance kept in the possession of a person who knows its qualities, in whatever place it may be kept, should be guarded with a care proportionate to the risk of danger to human life which it may occasion under the first part of the section ; throwing fireworks in a frequented place where there are people on foot or horse back etc. may be punishable.—Morgan and Macpherson. The causing of hurt by negligence in the use of a gun would fall within the purview of s. 337 rather than s. 286 of the Indian Penal Code. A. W. N. 1906, 91 = 3 Cr. L. J. 393 = 3 A. L. J. 332 = 28 A. 464.

Procedure—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

287. Whoever does, with any machinery, any act so rashly or negligently

Negligent conduct with respect to machinery. as to endanger human life or to be likely to cause hurt or injury to any other person, or knowingly or negligently omits to take such order with any machinery in his possession or under his care as is sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life from such machinery, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Note.—Where an owner of machinery employs a competent man to work it and leaves him unfettered, he cannot be held criminally liable for any accident, due to the errors of his employee. 8 P. R. 1906 Cr. Section 287 does not say "any possible danger" and so, the owner is not required to provide perfect security against every possibility of danger, however remote. All that he ought to do is to take reasonable precautions and so much care as is sufficient to guard against such danger as can be expected within the bounds of probability. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 507. Section 304A. only applies to such acts of the accused as are rash and negligent and are directly the cause of death of another person. But if death is not direct consequence, offence is under section 287. A person who had not taken any active part in the management of the mill when the death took place could not be held liable even under s. 287. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 453 = 127 Ind. Cas. 153.

Under his care.—The words "or under his care," which do not occur in the preceding sections, are probably inserted here to include Engineers, etc, who may be in charge of the machinery. The law requires that there shall be a competent knowledge of their duty in such persons, and the words "knowingly or negligently" must be interpreted accordingly—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

288. Whoever, in pulling down or repairing any building, knowingly

Negligent conduct with respect to pulling down or repairing buildings. or negligently omits to take such order with that building as is sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life from the fall of that building, or of any part thereof, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Such order as is sufficient.—The degree of caution is in proportion to the apparent necessity for it. If the building is in a retired place where there is no probability of persons passing by, measures of precaution may be sufficient which if the building is in a populous town and the repairs etc., are done at a time of day when the streets are usually thronged, would be wholly, inadequate. The words "the fall of that building," etc., "repairs" etc., seem to exclude, the not improbable case of danger of life arising from the risk of the fall of scaffolding, and other materials, provided for repairing it—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

289. Whoever knowingly or negligently omits to take such order with any

Negligent conduct with respect to animal. animal in his possession as is sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life, or any probable danger of grievous hurt from such animal, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

I. P. Code—33

Gist of the offence.—In order to convict a person of an offence under this section, it must be established in the affirmative that the accused knowingly or negligently omitted to take such order with the animal in question as was sufficient to guard against probable danger to human life or probable danger of grievous hurt from such animal. It should therefore, be established in the affirmative that there was a probability that the animal would cause grievous hurt or danger to human life. 1 A. L. J. 605 ; 1 Weir. 237 ; 5 P. R. 1904 Cr. ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 197 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 606. Before the owner or keeper of an animal can be convicted under this section, for negligence with respect to his animal, it must be made out that the animal was known to be ferocious, and that it was negligently kept. L. B. R. 1872—1892, 353. In case of animals naturally fierce, all persons acquainted with their habits are aware that danger to human life or risk of grievous hurt will be probable consequence of allowing them to be at large. 1 Weir. 238 ; 1 Weir. 237. In the case of letting loose domestic animals like a dog, no offence under s. 289 is committed unless the owner knew that the dog had a tendency to bite human beings. 19 Cr. L. J. 1=42 Ind. Cas. 913. Allowing a vicious animal to beat large is an offence under this section. 35 Ind. Cas. 815=17 Cr. L. J. 383=18 Bom. L. R. 682. Where the animal is not of such a description as is except from its ferocity to endanger the persons of those whom it meets, the owner or person in possession of it will not be criminally liable, unless he knows of the ferocity of the particular animal, and neglects to take proper measures to prevent the risk of hurting from it.

Fierce and dangerous animals, such as bears, or dogs which are known to bite people, must be kept with a care proportioned to the risk of keeping them—Morgan and Macpherson. ; see also L. B. R. (1872—1892) 353 ; 3 N. L. R. 90.

Danger of grievous hurt.—If there is a risk which falls short of danger to life or of grievous hurt, such as the risk of being slightly bitten, it will not be sufficient—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where a driver left carriage unattended, held, that in so doing the accused was guilty of knowingly or negligently omitting to take such order with the horse in his possession as was sufficient to guard against the probable danger of grievous hurt from such animal, which is an offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 163=Cr. C. 163=Cr. Reg. 24=4=881. The presence of stray cattle in a road at night cannot be said to involve probable danger to human life or of grievous hurt under this section. 1 Weir. 238. The essential ingredient of an offence under this section is that there should be probable danger to human life or limb. 18 Bom. L. R. 268=17 Cr. L. J. 383. Where owing to the negligence of the accused his dog bit the complainant in his arm causing three incised wounds the accused was guilty under this section. 2 Bur. L. J. 8=1923 Rang. 147.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

290. Whoever commits a public nuisance in any case not otherwise punishable by this Code, shall be punished with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

Punishment for public nuisance in cases not otherwise provided for.

Scope.—Under this section of the Penal Code, injury, danger, or annoyance must be shown to have been caused to the enjoyment of property or to the exercise of a public right on the part of a portion of the community or of any particular class of people. 9 W. R. Cr. 70 ; 1 C. P. L. R. 25 Cr. ; 1 Weir, 245 ; 22 A. L. J. 662. Annoyance to members of a single house is not a public nuisance. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 713.

Gambling.—Gambling in a private house is not per se a public nuisance. 1 Weir, 240 ; L. B. R. (1872-1892) 279. But where gambling is carried on in a public place, or where there is evidence to show that a public house is maintained as a common gaming-house for game, or that a crowd of disorderly persons was assembled that caused annoyance to persons living in the neighbourhood, in such a case gambling is a public nuisance. 1 Weir, 239 ; 1 Weir, 242.

Skinning of an animal which dies a natural death does not in itself constitute a public nuisance. 12 A. L. J. 349.

Object of the section.—Many sections of this and other Chapters provide a punishment for various specific public nuisance. This section punishes any public nuisance coming within the definition given by section 268, and not otherwise expressly punishable under the code. If there are nuisances which do not fall within any provision of this code they will at present remain punishable under any law now in force which may be found to provide a penalty.—Morgan and Macpherson. In order to fall under this section at least one person must have been annoyed. A. I. R. 1924 All. 194=21 A. L. J. 772=25 Cr. L. J. 332=77 Ind. Cas. 188.

Liability for acts of agent, etc.—A man may be guilty of a nuisance by act of his agent or servant. He may be personally ignorant of the particular act or omission which causes the injury, annoyance etc., and may have no intention to cause it. But if those whom he authorises to manage his property, acting within their general authority, occasion a public nuisance on such property, he must answer criminally for it.—Morgan and Macpherson. In case of user of premises giving rise to public nuisance, occupier is liable and not proprietor who is not in occupation, unless he abets. 46 C. 515=22 C. W. N. 1062=19 Cr. L. J. 913=29 C. L. J. 262=47 Ind. Cas. 287.

Length of time whether excuses such nuisance.—It seems that no length of time makes a public nuisance lawful, or exempt those who create or continue it from criminal liability. A person who continues nuisance created by another would probably be held to come within the words "whoever commits etc." If the owner of land erects a building which is a public nuisance and lets the land, he might probably be held criminally liable for its continuing during the lease.—Morgan and Macpherson.

A person was selling satta tickets at his shop with the result that 10 or 15 customers collected out side the shop, and obstructed the traffic in public street adjoining the shop. Held, that the facts alleged did not constitute an offence under s. 290 I. P. Code and that the assembling of 10 or 15 customers and the obstruction of traffic could not be regarded as the direct or necessary consequence of the sale of satta tickets. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 801.

Under this section, the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine must be one of simple imprisonment, and not of rigorous imprisonment. 1 Weir, 239; see also L. B. R. (1872—1892) 279.

Placing a charpoy temporarily on the road in a bazar, without any intention of obstructing traffic does not amount to the offence of causing public nuisance. 10 A. L. J. 362=13 Cr. L. The mere throwing of rubbish in one's own garden does not constitute a public nuisance. 1 Weir, 242. But keeping offensive vegetable matter in front of one's house is an offence under this section. 1 Weir, 243. The Chairman of a Municipality cannot be prosecuted under this section for an act, amounting to a public nuisance, committed by the Municipality. 1 Weir, 243. The trotting of rams trained to fight in a crowded marked place constitutes a public nuisance. 1 Weir, 243. But allowing pigs to stray in a village is not illegal. 1 Weir, 244. A person constructing a projection however small over a public road is guilty of an offence under this section. 6 Lah. 203; 86 Ind. Cas. 1006. A joint owner is responsible in law for nuisance caused by his property. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1235. The action of a Choukidar in making a noise at night by shouting 'Jagte raho, Jagte raho' so as to scare away thieves and bad characters from the house of his master does not amount to a public nuisance within the meaning of s. 290 of the I.P. Code. 29 O.C. 302=96 Ind. Cas. 876=27 Cr. L. J. 1020=3 O.W. N. 526=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 414. In order to constitute an offence under s. 290 I. P. Code, it is not necessary that the alleged nuisance should omit smell injurious to health, it is sufficient if they are offensive to the sense. 34 C. 73=5 C. L. J. 40=5 Cr. L. J. 45. The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render the person causing obstruction liable to punishment under s. 290 Penal Code. 20 C. 665. The omission to fence a well open to highway does not constitute a public nuisance when it is situate in private premises and at a distance of eight yards from the highway. 6 M. 280. The mere establishment of a butcher's shop is not an indictable nuisance under s. 290, I. P. Code. 18 P. R. 1867 Cr. Where a person omits to keep his ponies from straying he does not commit public nuisance punishable under s. 290 of the Penal Code. 6 W. R. Cr. 71. Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

291. Whoever repeats or continues a public nuisance, having been enjoined by any public servant who has lawful authority to issue such injunction not to repeat or continue such nuisance, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine, or with both.

Elements of offence.—In order to support a conviction for the offence of continuance of a nuisance after an injunction to discontinue under the previous section, it is necessary that the order of the Magistrate forbidding the continuance of the nuisance, or evidence of notice of such a character as to make plain the precise terms of the order and notice, be recorded in the case. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 295. To support a conviction under s. 291 there must be proof of an injunction to the persons charged individually against repeating the same public nuisance. 8 A. 99=A. W. N. 1886, 27; 20 W. R. Cr. 55.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

292. Whoever—

(a) sells, lets to hire, distributes, publicly exhibits or in any manner puts into circulation or for purposes of sale, hire, distribution, public exhibition or circulation Sale, etc., of obscene books, makes, produces or has in his possession any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, drawing, painting representation or figure or any other obscene object whatsoever, or

(b) imports, exports or conveys any obscene object for any of the purposes aforesaid, or knowing or having reason to believe that such object will be sold, let to hire, distributed or publicly exhibited or in any manner put into circulation, or

(c) takes part in or receives profits from any business in the course of which he knows or has reason to believe that any such obscene objects are, for any of the purposes aforesaid, made, produced, purchased, kept, imported exported, conveyed, publicly exhibited or in any manner put into circulation, or

(d) advertises or makes known by any means whatsoever that any person is engaged or is ready to engage in any act which is an offence under this section, or that any such obscene object can be produced from or through any person, or

(e) offers or attempts to do any act which is an offence under this section, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine or with both.

Exception.—This section does not extend to any book, pamphlet, writing drawing or painting kept or used bona fide for religious purposes or any representation sculptured, engraved, painted or otherwise represented on or in any temple, or any car used for the conveyance of idols, or kept or used for religious purpose.

Legislative changes.—This section has been added by act 8 of 1925.

Test of obscenity.—The test of obscenity with reference to a charge of distributing obscene literature, is whether the tendency of the matter is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influence and into whose hands a publication of this kind may fall. If a publication is detrimental to public morals and calculated to produce a pernicious effect in depraving and debauching the minds of the persons into whose hands it may come, it will be an obscene publication which it is the intention of the law to suppress. The question whether a publication is, or is not obscene, is a question of fact ; ; if a publication is in fact obscene, it is no defence to a charge of selling or distributing the same that the intention of the person so charged was innocent. 28A. 100 ; see also 15 Bom. L. R. 307 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 620 ; 62 Ind. Cas. 401 = 22 Cr. L. J. 513 ; 22 M. L. T. 169 = 5 L. W. 237 ; 20 B. 193 ; 3A. 837 ; 22 Cr. L. J. 413. 32 C. 247 ; 36 C.W.N. 985 = 139 Ind. Cas. 461 = 56 C. L. J. 123 = 1932 Cr. C. 608 = 33 Cr. L. J. 771 = 60 C. 201 = A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 651. Descriptions of diseases with appropriate remedies do not fall under this section. 18 Cr. L. J. 126 = 7 P. W. R. 1917 (Cr.) = 25 P. R. 1917 (Cr.) = 37 Ind. Cas. 478. Motive is immaterial if the book is obscene. 36 C. W. N. 985 = 56 C. L. J. 123 = 33 Cr. L. J. 177 = 60 C. 201.

Exception.—The tendency of a religious publication is not to deprave or corrupt the morals of persons and therefore a religious work is not obscene within the meaning of this section. 39 C. 377 = 15 C. L. J. 161. But a passage which is not obscene in its place in a religious book may become so by being published in a journal sold to the public. 5. P. R. 1917 Cr = 18 Cr. L. J. 505 = 39 Ind. Cas. 473.

Charges.—When a charge is brought against an accused under this section or section 294, it should always specify the words or representations alleged to be obscene. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 262 ; I. C. 356 ; see also 36 C. W. N. 985 = 56 C. L. J. 23 = 60 C. 201 = A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 651.

Checks to conception.—A book advocating checks to conception or explaining what apparatus helps such check, is not necessarily obscene. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 620.

The mere fact that a person is proprietor and published of a newspaper does not render him criminally liable for any obscene advertisement or other matter inserted therein by his servants, in the absence of a distinct finding that it was put in by the order or owing to the negligence of the proprietor. A. W. N. 1890 175. Advertisement containing the word "asan" is not necessarily obscene. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 649 = 110 Ind. Cas. 805.

The proprietor of a printing press, who had entrusted the whole working of the press to an agent, is not liable to be punished under s. 292, I. P. Code for an obscene book printed in the press, unless it has been printed with his consent, knowledge or authority. 35 P. R. 1905 Cr. = 171 P. L. R. 1905 = 2 Cr. L. J. 717.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

293. Whoever sells, lets to hire, distributes, exhibits or circulates to any person under the age twenty years any such obscene objects as is referred to in the last preceding section, or offers or attempts so to do, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Legislative changes.—This section is new and has been inserted by Act 8 of 1925.

Scope.—Here the offence is an aggravated one, because the object of such an offence is a person who is under twenty years of age and as such their minds are more open to immoral influences by such objects. Here a more attempt is also made punishable like the substantive offence. As regards the test of obscenity see the dictum of Lord Cockburn C. J. in Reg v. Hicklin (L. R. 3 Q. D. B. 360), where he says : "I think the test of obscenity is this : whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall." So it appears that a book which may not be considered obscene in the case of an adult person may be considered obscene under this section because this section deals with youthful minds. So far as professional men are concerned many objects should not be considered obscene, which in cases of ordinary people are considered obscene. So in my humble opinion merely legal, medical and other scientific books should be exempt from the operation of this section—where they are meant purely for the profession or written for the advancement of science.

On a conviction of a person charged under s. 293, the Magistrate was not competent to order the destruction of the obscene books surrendered by him, under s. 418 Cr. Pro. Code. 3A. 837=A. W. N. 1181, 94.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

294. Whoever, to the annoyance of others,

(a) does any obscene act in any public place, or

(b) sings, recites, or utters any obscene songs, ballad or words in or near any public place, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months or with fine, or with both.

Legislative Changes.—This section has been substituted by Act 3 of 1895 s. 8.

Proof.—A clear and specific allegation of the words and of the person by whom they were uttered must be stated against the accused, prosecuted under this section. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 50; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 262; 1 C. 356; but see 1 Weir. 251. A conviction under s. 294 for singing obscene songs in a public place was set aside, in the absence of proof that the particular songs sung were obscene, though they belonged to a class of songs many of which were obscene. 4 B. H. C. Cr. 25.

Annoyance.—Must be proved. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 332.

Punishment.—As to what punishment is sufficient, vide, L. B. R. (1872-1892), 537; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 309; 2 Bur. L. J. 98. Where an accused has been once tried by a village headman he cannot be tried again by a Magistrate. 2 Bur. L. J. 149=A. I. R. 1923 rang 253.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate;

294A. Whoever keeps any office or place for the purpose of drawing any lottery not authorized by Government shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

And whoever publishes any proposal to pay any sum or to deliver any goods, or to do or forbear doing anything for the benefit of any person, on any event or contingency relative or applicable to the drawing of any ticket, lot, number or figure in any such lottery, shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

Legislative Changes.—This section has been inserted by the Indian Penal Code, Amendment Act (27 of 1870) s. 10.

Annoyance or injury.—In order to obtain a conviction under this section, it is necessary to give evidence of actual annoyance or injury to the public. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 59.

Lottery.—Essential factor in lottery is scheme for distribution of prizes determined solely by chance. A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 550=122 Ind. Cas. 777; see also 30 Cr. L. J. 9=53B. 57=30 Bom. L. Where a fund was in its nature a lottery, held, that the mere fact of its being registered would not exonerate the persons carrying on the business from liability under s. 294A. 1 Weir. 252; see also 1 Weir. 251. The actual drawing of lottery is punishable. 17 P. R. 1910 Cr. The words "any such lottery" in this section mean any lottery not authorised by Government. 10 B. 97. The term "goods" does not include immovable property and the running of a lottery by which a ginning factory was to be raffled at five rupees tickets constitutes an offence under that section. Where the accused enclosed five rupee notes in cigarette packets and published pamphlet setting out facts of this scheme the transaction although amounted to lottery no offence under this section was committed. A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 550. Ingredients of the offence under the second part of s. 294, A. I. P. Code are; firstly, there must be a lottery, secondly, there must be a drawing of any ticket. 1 lot, number or figure in such lottery and thirdly, there must be a publication of the proposal to pay any money or to do something for the benefit on any person on any event applicable to such drawing. CHAPTER XV.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO RELIGION.

Principle of this chapter.—The principle on which this chapter has been framed is this—that every man should be allowed to profess his own religion and that no man should be suffered to insult the religion of another. The question whether insults offered to religion ought to be visited with punishment, does not appear at all to depend on the question whether that religion true, or false. The religion may be false but the pain which such insults gives to the professors of that religion is real. It is often, as the most superficial observation may convince us, as real a pain, and as acute a pain, as is caused by almost any offence against the person, against property or against character. Nor is there any compensating good whatsoever to be set off against this pain. Discussion, indeed, tends to elicit truth. But insults have no such tendency. They can be employed just as easily against the purest faith as against the most monstrous superstition. It is as easier to argue against falsehood than against truth. But it is easy to pull down or defile the temples of truth as those of falsehood. It is as easy to molest with ribaldry and clamour, men assembled for purposes of pious and rational worship, as men engaged in the most absurd ceremonies. Such insults, when directed against erroneous opinions, seldom have any other effect than to fix those opinions deeper, and to give a character of peculiar ferocity to theological dissension. Instead of eliciting truth they only inflame fanaticism—Morgan and Macpherson. It is not intended by this chapter to make criminally punishable breaches of ritualistic observance committed by persons of any one creed against the canons of their own faith. 1 Weir. 253.

295. Whoever destroys, damages, or defiles any place of worship, or any object held sacred by any class of persons, with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of any class of persons, or with the knowledge that any class of persons is likely to consider such destruction, damage, or defilement as an insult to their religion shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both,

Scope.—There is distinction, not arbitrary, between objects which are objects of respect and even of veneration and of objects which are held sacred; and such distinction appears to have been kept in view by the legislature. 10 M. 126. The word—"object" in this section is not limited to inanimate objects but includes animate object, which are held sacred, as well as idols, relics or the like. 27 P. R. 1884 Cr. But see 17 C. 1852.

Defile—The word "defile" must be taken to be used in the sense in which it is generally used with reference to religious matters. It makes no difference that the guilty person is a worshipper of the temple which he has defiled. 1 Weir, 256. See also 1 Weir, 253; U. B. R. (1892-96) Vol. I. 198. The word "defile" cannot be confined to the idea of making dirty but also extends to ceremonial pollution. 41 M. 980. The mere defilement of a place of worship is no offence. 7 C. P. L. R. 45.

Cases.—A person cannot be punished under this section for unintentional pollution of well water. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 979; see also 5 C. L. R. Cr. 20. The killing of a cow even if done with the intention of offending religious susceptibilities of others is no offence under this section. 10 P. R. Cr. 1918=1 P. W. R. Cr. 198=44 Ind. Cas. 330=19 Cr. L. J. 314 (F. B.); 21 Cr. L. J. 453=56 Ind. Cas. 437. A person cannot be convicted under this section for damaging mosque by placing rafters of his roof on the walls of the mosque. 3 Lah. L. J. 247. Where a band of Mahomedans entered a Hindu temple and damaged property therein they are guilty under this section. 25 Cr. L. J. 1173=82 Ind. Cas. 37=1925 Oudh. 50; see also 25 Cr. L. J. 155=76 Ind. Cas. 299=1921 Nag. 121.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge. I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:

That you, on or about the day of at destroyed (or damaged or defiled a certain place of worship, to wit (or an object, to wit) held sacred by with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of (or with the knowledge that are likely to consider such destruction, damage, or defilement as an insult to their religion) and thereby committed an offence under s. 295 of the Indian Penal Code etc.

295A. Whoever, with deliberate and malicious intention of outraging the religious feelings of any class of his Majesty's subjects by words either spoken or written, or by visible representations, insults or attempts to insult the religion or the religious belief of that class, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Legislative changes—This section has been inserted by Act XXV of 1927.

Object—"The prevalence of malicious writing intended to insult the religion or outrage the religious feelings of various classes of His Majesty's subjects had made it necessary to examine the existing provisions of the law with a view to seeing whether they require to be strengthened. Chapter XV of the India Penal Code, which deals with offences relating to religion, provides no penalty in respect of the kind described above. Such writings can usually be dealt with under section 153 A. of the Indian Penal Code as it is seldom that they do not represent an attempt to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes. It must be recognised, however, that this is only an indirect way of dealing with acts which may properly be made punishable themselves apart from the question whether they have the further effect of promoting feelings of enmity or hatred between classes. Accordingly it is proposed to insert a new section in Chapter XV of the Indian Penal Code, with the object of making it a specific offence, intentionally to insult or attempt to insult the religion or outrage or attempt to outrage the religious feelings of any class of His Majesty's subjects. Certain amendments are also proposed in the Code of Criminal Procedure in pursuance of the object of the Bill.—Statement of Objects and Reasons of Act XXV of 1927.

Notes.—"The proposed new section 295 A is by far the most important provision contained in the Bill and we have examined it in the lights of such criticism as have been expressed since the Bill was introduced whether by the members of the legislature or of the general public and now proceed to set forth our conclusions in detail. In the first place we are of opinion that the simple use of the word 'intentionally,' does not sufficiently bring out what we consider is the essence of the offence, namely, that the insult to religion or the outrage to religious feelings must be the sole or primarily at least the deliberate and conscious intention. We have accordingly decided to adopt the phraseology of section 298 which required deliberate intention in order to constitute the offence with which it deals.

"Secondly we think to penalise even an intentional outrage or attempted outrage upon the religious feeling of any class would be casting the net too wide for the cases with particular reference to which the Bill has been introduced. At the same time, we realize that the reference to the outraging of religious feelings was inserted to provide for cases of an insult to the founder of a religion or a person held sacred by the followers of a particular religion (vide Raj Paul v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 590; but see A. I. R. 1927 All. 654). We have therefore provided that the new section shall, only apply in cases where a religion is insulted with the deliberate intention of outraging the religious feelings of its followers; and to make it clear that the attack on a founder is not omitted from the scope of the section, we have specifically made punishable an insult to the "religious belief" of the followers of any religion.

"Further we are impressed by an argument to the effect that an insult to religion or to the religious belief of the followers of a religion might be inflicted in good faith by a writer with the object of facilitating some measure of social reform by administering such a shock to the followers of the religion as would ensure notice being taken of any criticism so made. We have therefore amplified the words with deliberate intention by inserting reference to notice, and we think that the section which we have now evolved be both comprehensive and at the same time of not too wide an application.—Report of the Select Committee.

Deliberate and malicious intention.—"The words 'with deliberate and malicious intention,' indeed provide a fair amount of protection to a person accused under this section as burden of proof is thereby put on the prosecution in this respect." Minute of Dissent by N. C. Keller Esqr.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session or Presidency Magistrate.

296. Whoever voluntarily causes disturbance to any assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship, or religious ceremonies shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Disturbance.—In order to constitute a disturbance within the meaning of this section, it is not necessary that there should be a stopping or an actual prevention of the carrying on of a religious service nor is it necessary that the religious assembly should be really disturbed. 1 Weir, 259; 12 A. 494 (F. B); An assembly can be disturbed even in a high way. 8 A. L. J. 1150; but see 119 P. L. R. 1909. The essential ingredients of an offence under this section is the doing of an act which causes disturbances to an assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship. 12 A. L. J. 820; 3 Mys. L. J. 77; see also 11 Mys. L. J. 455; 20 Cr. L. J. 421=17 A. L. J. 820=51 Ind. Cas. 197; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 196=34 Cr. L. J. 778=10 O. W. N. 582=1933 Cr. C. 706=138 Ind. Cas. 687.

I. P. Code—34

The assembly must be lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship. The place of assembly may be unfit or improper for the purpose, though the object of the assembly may be lawful. A religious assemblage held in a public street or thoroughfare, so as to cause obstruction would probably not be protected by the provisions of this section from disturbance voluntarily caused by passengers, or by public servants in the exercise of their duties.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

297. Whoever, with the intention of wounding the feelings of any person, or of insulting the religion of any person, or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded, or that the religion of any person is likely to be insulted thereby, commits any trespass in any place of worship, or on any place of sepulchre, or any place set apart for the performance of funeral rites or as a depository for the remains of the dead, or offers any indignity to any human corpse, or causes disturbance, to any persons assembled for the performance of funeral ceremonies, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Gist of the offence—The provision of this section is applicable where there is a trespass into a place of religious worship with the knowledge that the feeling of persons would be wounded thereby. Rat. Un. Cr. 148.

Trespass—The term "trespass" means any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with knowledge or intention as is defined in that section. 49 A. 529; 17 C. W. N. 534=40 C. 548. An adulterous intercourse is such an injurious act. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 32; 1924 All. 2=45A. 52. The meaning of the word "trespass" in this section, is not the same as is attached to it in the expression "criminal trespass" in s. 441. The word "trespass" denotes a wrongful act, and the act of a person who destroys or disturbs a place of sepulchre with the intention of wounding the feeling of any person. 23 P. R. 1915 Cr. The mere act of trespassing in a place of worship or a burial place, etc, is punished when the trespasser has the intention described in the first part of this section. The intention to wound the feelings or religion, not of a class of persons but of a single individual, suffices to make the act of trespass an offence. The Court should be satisfied that the trespass was committed, or the indignity offered knowingly, and with this intention. An act which is done with the knowledge that a person is likely to consider that act as an insult to his religion, is an act by which "religion is likely to be insulted" within the meaning of this section.—Morgan and Macpherson. Persons who enter a burial ground and plough up land used as a grave-yard are guilty of an offence under this section, although they enter the ground with the knowledge of the owner, and apparently with his consent. 18A. 395=A. W. N. 1896, 119; see also 8 A. L. J. 927=12 Cr. L. J. 532.

As regards meaning of "indignity" vide, 1 Weir, 287; 26 P. R. 3897 Cr.

The stopping of a taxia during a Maharram procession does not amount to an offence under this section. A. W. N. 1895, 49.

An accused, who commits an offence by having sexual intercourse within the enclosure surrounding a pagoda, is punishable under this section for trespassing on a place of worship with the knowledge that the religious feelings of the worshippers are likely to be injured thereby. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. 1, 199. The mere utterance of the words "do not cremate the body" unaccompanied by any attempt to prevent the cremation or by any manifestation on the part of the accused of their intention to interfere if the execution was persisted in, could not be regarded as a "disturbance" within the meaning of this section. 44 P. L. R. 1919=20 Cr. L. J. 145. Where as result of political differences, the complainant was boycotted, and obstacles put in the way of burying his son but no violence was actually used no offence under the law was committed. 20 A. L. J. 93=23 Cr. L. J. 73=65 Ind. Cas. 424. Persons who have sexual connection in a mosque commits an offence under this section. 45A. 52=21 A. L. J. 455=73 Ind. Cas. 935=24 Cr. L. J. 911. The essence of an offence under this section is trespass. For conviction, trespass with intention and in the place mentioned in the section must be proved. The term trespass used in its strict legal sense means unjustifiable intrusion upon property in possession of another. 21 Cr. L. J. 235=56 Ind. Cas. 235; but see A. I. R. 1924 All. 9. The term "trespass" in this section does not have the same meaning as is attached to "criminal trespass" in s. 441. I. P. Code. The term appears to mean any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge as is specified in this section. 1 Rang. 690; see also 45 A. 529=21 A. L. J. 455=24 Cr. L. J. 911. Disturbing graves of others even on one's own land is an offence. 137 Ind. Cas. 872=36 C. W. N. 544=1932 Cr. C. 449=33 Cr. L. J. 517=A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 459.

Procedure—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

298. Whoever, with the deliberate intention of wounding the religious feelings of any person, utters any word or makes any sound in the hearing of that person, or makes any gesture in the sight of that person, or places any object in the sight of that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Gist of the offence.—The intention to wound the religious feelings of another must be in order to convict a person under this section, a deliberate one. 4 P. R. 1890 Cr. This section treats of offences relating to religion and not to those relating to caste. 6 C. P. L. R. Cr. 7; Rat, Un. Cr. C. 592.

Object of the section.—The Law Commissioners thus described the object of this provision:—"In framing this clause we had two objects in view. We wish to allow all fair latitude to religious discussion, and at the same time to prevent the professors of any religion from offering, under the pretext of such discussion, intentional insults to what is held sacred by others. We do not conceive that any person can be justified in wounding with deliberate intention, the religious feelings of his neighbours by words, gestures, or exhibitions. A worm expression dropped in the heat of controversy, or an argument urged by a person, not for the purpose of insulting and annoying the professors of a different creed, but in good faith for the purpose of indicating his own, will not fall under the definition contained in this clause. The speech or gesture etc, which is punishable as an offence by this section, must be advisedly and deliberately intended to wound the religious feeling of some person."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

CHAPTER XVI.

OF OFFENCES AFFECTING THE HUMAN BODY.

Of offence affecting Life.

299. Whoever causes death, by doing an act with the intention of causing death, or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he is likely, by such act, to cause death, commits the offence of culpable homicide.

Illustrations.

(a) A lays sticks and turf over a pit, with the intention of thereby causing death, or with the knowledge that death is likely to be thereby caused. Z believing the ground to be firm, treads on it, falls in, and is killed. A has committed the offence of culpable homicide.

(b) A knows Z to be behind a bush. R does not know it. A, intending to cause, or knowing it to be likely to cause, Z's death induces B to fire at the bush. B fires and kills Z. Here B may be guilty of no offence; but A has committed the offence of culpable homicide. (vide, 26 O. C. 18=24 Cr. L. J. 513.)

(c) A, by shooting at a fowl with intent to kill and steal it, kills B, who is behind a bush; A not knowing that he was there. Here, although A was doing an unlawful act, he was not guilty of culpable homicide, as he did not intend to kill B, or cause death by doing an act that he knew was likely to cause death.

Explanation 1.—A person who causes bodily injury to another, who is labouring under a disorder, disease, or bodily infirmity, and thereby accelerates the death of that other, shall be deemed to have caused his death.

Explanation 2.—Where death is caused by bodily injury, the person who causes such bodily injury shall be deemed to have caused the death, although by resorting to proper remedies and skilful treatment, the death might have been prevented.

Explanation 3.—The causing of the death of a child in the mother's womb is not homicide. But it may amount to culpable homicide to cause the death of a living child, if any part of that child has been brought forth, though the child may not have breathed or been completely born.

Offences affecting the human body.—"The first portion of the chapter of offences against the body, consists of those offences which affect human life. As this is the most important division of the chapter, the attention of the reader must be specially given to those General Exceptions which shew when the causing of the death of a human being is not an offence. Homicides, which in their circumstances can be brought within any one of the General Exceptions, cannot, it is needless to state, be deemed culpable homicides within the definition given in section 1, of the present chapter. Those homicides which are not culpable, and therefore not offences, may be generally described as being (1) accidental, or (2) justifiable.

1 "Accidental homicide" is, where death is caused by accident or misfortune, without any criminal intention or knowledge by one who does a lawful act in a lawful manner and with proper care and caution. See section 80 ante.

"There may sometimes be great difficulty in giving any legal certainty to such vague terms as "accident" "proper care and caution", and others which occur in this General Exception. But it is nevertheless the duty of the Court to ascertain in each case after a careful consideration of the facts, what is their true meaning as applied to those facts.

"Suppose A and Z engage in some game or sport together in the course of which A unintentionally causes Z's death. If the sport is not dangerous and is likely to cause no harm or only very slight harm (See section 95) A has committed no offence. But if the sport, is a very dangerous one, carried on roughly and carelessly, or if ill-will to the deceased person is proved, or unfair play, or some undue advantage taken in the course even of a harmless pastime,—the Court will probably conclude that A, having caused Z's death in a cruel or unusual manner, has committed either the offence of culpable homicide or some other offence. See section 87.

"Again suppose a parent whips his child and death follows the whipping. The Court, having ascertained satisfactorily that the punishment was not of a cruel or unusual kind, but was only such moderate chastisement as the law allows to parent for his child's benefit, would doubtless decide that the death of the child was caused by accident or misfortune and that the father had committed no offence. See section 89.

In these and similar instances it is the duty of the Court first to ascertain, and then to apply, the rule of law which is applicable. It must determine the extent of the power of a parent over his child,—the lawlessness of a particular act or game or of the manner in which it is performed or played,—what degree of caution the law requires in the particular case under consideration, etc. If A causes B's death unintentionally by shooting him with a gun which A did not know to be loaded, and the question arises whether the homicide is accidental or culpable,—A if he proved that he had reasonable grounds to suppose that the gun was not loaded (as if he had himself discharged it an hour before and put it in a place of safe custody where he again found it), would probably be deemed to have acted with proper care and caution. The utmost caution that can be used is not requisite—but only that reasonable caution which is usual and ordinary in like cases.

"2. Justifiable homicide is where the taking away of life is justified because it is taken by a judicial act, or in pursuance of a judicial sentence pronounced by some Court or Judge,—or because it is taken in the exercise of a power given, or supposed in good faith to be given by law."

"The execution of a person who has been duly convicted of murder and sentenced to be punished with death, is an obvious instance of death warranted by the sentence of a Court of Justice and therefore justified."

"The execution of a criminal in pursuance of the judgment of a Court even though the Court had not jurisdiction to pass the, judgement if the executioner in good faith believed that the Court had such jurisdiction, is also an instance of justifiable homicide. And not only is the executioner justified in such a case, but the Courts or Judges passing judgment in the exercise of some authority which they believe in good faith to be conferred by law, are equally justified."

"Where life is taken in the exercise of a power given to a person by law, without any judicial act or order, the homicide is equally justifiable. Thus in the exercise of the right of private defence the causing of death is, in many cases, justifiable. See Chapter IV, sections 96, 106."

"It is also justifiable where a person in good faith believes himself bound by law to do an act which causes death. For instance the soldier who fires on a mob by the order of his superior officer and thus causes the death of an innocent person is justified. And it may be under peculiar circumstances that an officer of justice in hot pursuit of a criminal, whom he has authority to arrest would be held justified for an act intended only to stop the flight but which may have caused, and been likely to cause, the fugitive's death."

"It is also justifiable in certain cases to cause a person's death for the purpose of avoiding or preventing further loss of life. See section 81."

"Of some of these kinds of justifiable homicides, it may be observed that the conduct of both the slayer and the person slain in each case requires the most careful examination. The justification of the taking away of human life by private persons ought to be confined strictly within those limits which are compatible with the instincts of nature, the security of society and the due administration of public justice."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Scope of the section.—This section clearly defines the offence of culpable homicide. 152. Ind. Cas. 271=1934 Cr. C. 1137=A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 145.

Murder and culpable homicide.—All murders are culpable homicides, but all culpable homicides are not murders. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. 1. 282. Culpable homicide is not murder unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention stated, in one or more of the four clauses to be interpreted in the light of the four illustrations appended to it, one for each clause. Duraj v Emperor, 57 Ind. Cas. 689.

The difference between culpable homicide and murder is thus pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock: "There are, in my opinion, several important distinctions between murder and culpable homicide. An offence cannot amount to murder unless it falls within the definition of culpable homicide, for s. 300 merely points out the case in which 'culpable homicide' is murder."

"Culpable homicide is not murder if it the case falls within any of the exceptions mentioned in s. 300."

"The causing of death by doing an act with the intention of causing death is culpable homicide. It is also murder, unless the case falls within one of the exceptions in section 300."

"Causing death with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person, if the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, in my opinion, falls within the words of section 299, 'with intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death,' and is culpable homicide." It is also murder, unless the case falls within one of the exceptions in section 300, clause 3.

"Causing death by doing an act with the knowledge that such act is likely to cause death is culpable homicide, but it is not murder even if it does not fall within any of the exceptions mentioned in section 300, unless it falls within clause 2, 3, or 4 of section 300, that is to say, unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of a person to whom the harm is caused, or with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person; and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or unless the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death."

* In speaking of acts 1, of course, include illegal omissions."

"There are many cases falling within the words of section 299 'or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death, that do not fall within the 2nd, 3rd or 4th clause of section 300, such for instance as the offences described in sections 279, 280, 281, 282, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288 and 289, if the offender knows that his act or illegal omission is likely to cause death, and if in fact it does cause death. But, although he may know that the act or illegal omission is so dangerous that it is likely to cause death, it is not murder, even if death is caused thereby, unless the offender knows that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death or unless he intends thereby to cause death or such bodily injury as is described in clause 2 or 3 of section 300"—Per Peacock C. J. in Q ; v. Gora Chand Gope, 5 W. R. 45 Cr ; see also 1 B. 342 ; 29 Cr. L. J. 17 ; L. B. R. (1893—1899) 112 ; U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I. 282 ; 8 W. R. 47 ; 35 Cr. L. J. 1113 = 150 Ind. Cas. 819 = 11 O.W.N. 851 = A. I. R. 1934 oudh. 405. Culpable homicide may not amount to murder where the degree of means ria specified in s. 299 is present but not the special degrees referred to by s. 300. 152 Ind. Cas. 271 = 1934 Cr. C. 1137 = A. I. R. 1934 sind. 145.

Causes death.—The expression "causing death" in this section means putting an end to a person's life, and all the intentions mentioned in the section must be directed deliberately to putting an end to human life. The knowledge must have reference to the particular circumstances in which an accused is placed. The intention of the accused must be judged not in the light of what he supposed to be, the circumstances. 42 M. 547 = 37 M. L. J. 17. "It is to be observed that the section does not require that the offender should intend to kill (or know himself to be likely to kill), any particular person. It is enough if he "causes the death" of any one by doing an act with the intention of "causing death" to any one, whether the person intended to be killed or any one else. This is clear from the first illustration to the section. Nor is it necessary that the death should be caused directly by the action of the offender, without contributory action by the person whose death is caused or by some other person. That contributory action by the person whose death is caused will not necessarily prevent the act of the offender from being culpable homicide, even if the death could not have occurred without such contributory action is clear from the above illustration, and that contributory action by a third person will not necessarily prevent the act of the offender from being culpable homicide, even if the death could not have occurred without such contributory action, is clear from the second illustration.... The Indian law commissioners in their report (1896) on the Indian Penal Code call attention to the unqualified use of the words to 'cause death' in the definition of culpable homicide, and rightly point out that there is a great difference between acts which cause death immediately and acts which cause death remotely, and they point out that the difference is a matter to be considered by the Courts when estimating the effect of the evidence in each case. Almost all, perhaps all results, are accused by combination of causes, yet we ordinarily speak of a result as caused by the most conspicuous or efficient cause, without specifying all the contributory causes. In Webster's Dictionary "cause" is defined as "that which produces or effects a result ; that from which anything proceeds and without which it would not exist ;" and again "the general idea of cause that without which another thing called the effect, cannot be ; and it is divided by Aristotle into four kinds known by the name of the material, the formal, the efficient and the final cause. The efficient cause is the agent, that is prominent or conspicuous in producing a change or result." Per Benson J. in Public Prosecutor v. Mushunooru, 13 Ind. Cas. 833 = 22 M. L. J. 333 ; 11 M. L. T. 127 = (1912) M. W. N. 136. The expression "causing death" in s. 299 of the Penal Code, means putting an end to a human life and all the three intentions mentioned in the section must be directed deliberately to putting an end to a human life. The knowledge must have reference to the particular circumstances in which an accused is placed. The intention of the accused must be judged, not in the light of actual circumstances, but in the light of what he supposed to be the circumstances. A man is not guilty of culpable homicide if his intention was directed to what he supposed to be a lifeless body. 42 M. 547 = 37 M. L. J. 17 = 26 M. L. T. 68 = (1919) M. W. N. 340 = 51 Ind. Cas. 164 = 20 Cr. L. J. 404.

By doing any act.—According to section 32 of the Code, words which refer to acts done extend also to "illegal" omissions. According to section 43. the word "illegal" is applicable to anything which is an offence or which is prohibited by law, or which furnishes ground for civil action.—In the original draft of the Code, its authors framed the section as follows : "Whoever does any act, or omits what he is legally bound to do, with the intention of thereby causing or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause, the death of any person, and does by such act or omission cause the death of any person, is said to commit the offence of "voluntary culpable homicide." In support of this they observe ; "The first point to which we wish to call the attention of his Lordship in Council is the expression 'omits what he is legally bound to do' in the definition of voluntary culpable homicide. These words or other words tantamount in effect, frequently recur in the Code. We think this the most convenient place for explaining the reason which has led us so often to employ them ; for if that reason shall appear to be sufficient in cases in which human life is concerned, it will a fortiori be sufficient in other cases.

"Early in the progress of the Code it became necessary for us to consider the following question : When acts are made punishable on the ground that those acts produce, or are intended to produce, or are known, to be likely to produce, certain evil effects, to what extent ought omissions which produce, which are intended to produce, or which are known likely to produce, the same evil effects to be made punishable ?

"Two things we take to be evident ; first that some of these omissions ought, to be punished in exactly the same manner in which acts are punished ; secondly, that all these omissions ought not to be punished. It will hardly be disputed that a gaoler who voluntarily causes the death of a prisoner by omitting to supply that prisoner with food, or a nurse who voluntarily causes the death of an infant intrusted to her care by omitting to take it out of a tub of water into which it has fallen, ought to be treated as guilty of murder. On the other hand, it will hardly be maintained that a man should be punished as a murderer because he omitted to relieve a beggar, even though there might be the clearest proof that the death of the beggar was the effect of this omission, and that the man who omitted to give the alms knew that the death of the beggar was likely to be the effect of the omission. It will hardly be maintained that a surgeon ought to be treated as a murderer for refusing to go from Calcutta to Meerut to perform an operation, although it should be absolutely certain that this surgeon was the only person in India who could perform it, and that if it were not performed, the person who required it would die. It is difficult to say whether a Penal Code which should put no omissions on the same footing with acts, or a Penal Code which should put all omission on the same footing with acts, would produce consequences more absurd and revolting. There is no country in which either of these principles is adopted. Indeed, it is hard to conceive how if either were adopted, society could be held together."

"It is plain therefore, that a middle course must be taken ; but it is not easy to determine what that middle course ought to be. The absurdity of the two extremes is obvious. But there are innumerable intermediate points ; and wherever the line of demarcation may be drawn, it will, we fear, include some cases which we might wish to exempt, and will exempt some which we might wish to include"...

"What we propose is this, that where acts are made punishable on the ground that they have caused, or have been intended to cause, or have been known to be likely to cause certain evil effect ; omissions which have caused, which have been intended to cause, or which have been known likely to cause, the same effect shall be punishable in the same manner provided that such omissions are on other grounds illegal. An omission is illegal, if it be an offence if it be a breach of some direction of law, or if it be such a wrong as would be a good ground for a civil action."

"We cannot defend this rule better than by giving a few illustrations of the way in which it will operate. A omits to give Z food and by that omission voluntarily causes Z's death. Is this murder ? Under our rule it is murder if it was Z's gaoler, directed by the law to furnish Z with food, It is murder if Z was the infant child of A, and had therefore a legal right to sustenance, which right a civil Court would enforce against A. It is murder if Z was a forbidden invalid and if a nurse hired to feed Z. It is murder if A was detaining Z in an unlawful confinement, and had thus contracted a legal obligation to furnish Z, during the continuance of the confinement, with necessaries. It is not murder if Z is a beggar who has no other claim on A save that of humanity."

"A omits to tell Z that a river is swollen so high that Z cannot safely attempt to ford it, and by his omission voluntarily causes Z's death. This is murder, if he is a peon stationed by authority to warn travellers from attempting to ford the river. It is murder if A is a guide who had contracted to conduct Z. It is not murder if A is a person on whom Z has no other claim than that of humanity."

"A savage dog fastens on Z, A omits to call off the dog knowing that if the dog be not called off, it is likely that Z will be killed. Z is killed. This is murder in A, if the dog belonged to A, inasmuch as his omission to take proper order with the dog is illegal. But if A be a mere passer-by, it is not murder."

"It is indeed, most highly desirable that men should not merely abstain from doing harm to their neighbours, but should render active services to their neighbours. In general, however, the penal law must content itself with keeping men from doing positive harm, and must leave to public opinion and to the teachers of morality and religion, the office of furnishing men with motives for doing positive good. It is evident that to attempt to punish men by law for not rendering to others all the service which it is their duty to render to others would be preposterous. We must grant impunity to the vast majority of those omissions which a benevolent morality would pronounce reprehensible, and must content ourselves with punishing such omissions only when they are distinguished from the rest by some circumstance which marks them out as peculiarly fit objects of penal legislation."—Note M. In support of this the Commissioners in their first report say: "It seems to us that the line drawn in the Indian Code by the use of the adjectives, legal and illegal" applied to the duty and the omission respectively, is perfectly plain and intelligible, at the same time it is just and right and it does not appear to differ from the rule of English law as laid "down in the Digest."—Vide, clause 241 of the First Report on the Penal Code.

In all the above cases the legal duty of acting arises from special circumstances whereby the particular person concerned had taken it upon himself. It will usually arise thus; for the community at large are seldom under any legal duties but negative ones—duties to abstain from the commission of certain acts. "If I saw a man, who was not under my charge, taking up a tumbler of poison, I should not become guilty of any crime by not stopping him. I am under no legal obligation to protect a stranger." But the law itself does in some cases impose upon a special class of persons some duty of positive character, a duty of acting. Thus parents are responsible for the care of their children; and consequently, if a child's death is caused, or even accelerated, by a parent's gross neglect in not providing sufficient food or clothing for his child, the parent will be guilty of man-slaughter. The mere fact that there was some degree of negligence on the parent's part will not suffice. There must be a wicked negligence, a negligence as great as to satisfy a jury that the prisoner did not care whether the child died or not. Reg. v. Nicholls. 13 Cox. 75; Kinney's Outlines of Cr. law p. 221. Any adult who undertakes the care of a person who is helpless, whether it be through infancy. (Reg. v. Nicholls. 13 Cox. 75) or even through mere infirmity [Reg. v. Instan, L. R. (1893) 1 Q. B. 450], will similarly be guilty of man-slaughter if this person die through his wicked neglect. But the degree of negligence must be not merely a culpable but a criminal one. It is not enough to shew that there was such carelessness as would support a civil action for negligence, there must be a wicked negligence. Reg. v. Paine. The Times. Feb. 25th, 1880.

Death caused by speaking.—'A verbally directs Z to swallow a poisonous drug; Z swallows it, and dies;' and this says Mr. Livingstone, is homicide in A. It certainly ought to be so considered. The reasonable course, in our opinion, is to consider speaking as an act, and to treat A as guilty of voluntary culpable homicide, if by speaking he has voluntarily caused Z's death, whether his words operated circuitously by inducing Z to swallow poison or directly by throwing Z into convulsions Suppose it to be proved to the entire conviction of a Criminal Court that Z, the deceased, was in a very critical state of health; that A, the heir of Z's property, had been informed by Z's physicians that Z's recovery absolutely depended on his being kept quiet in mind, and that the smallest mental excitement would endanger his life; that A immediately broke into Z's sick room, and told him a dreadful piece of intelligence, which was a pure invention; that Z went into fits, and died on the spot; that A had afterwards boasted of having cleared the way for himself to a good property by this artifice; these things being fully proved, no Judge could doubt that A had voluntarily caused the death of Z; nor do we perceive any reason for not punishing A in the same manner in which he would have been punished if he had mixed arsenic in Z's medicine." Note M. The Commissioners in their first report on the Penal Code said: "Having naturally considered the matter, we come to the same conclusion with the authors of the code that if death is certainly caused by words deliberately used by a person with the intention of causing the result, or with the knowledge that in the condition of the party to whom the words are spoken it is likely that they will make such an impression upon him as to cause his death, and without any such excuse as is admissible under any of the provisions in the chapter of General Exceptions, there is no sufficient reason why that person should be excepted from the penalty of culpable homicide, any more than one who has caused death by the infliction of bodily injury which he knew to be likely to cause death. Here is the wilful doing of that which is known to be likely to produce evil, manifesting the mens rea essential to criminal responsibility; the evil produced is death; the efficient cause, the words spoken. It is scarcely agreeable to reason that having traced the effect to its cause, the law should refuse to acknowledge it as an effective cause; or that the Judge should be obliged to say, it is true the effect was produced by the operation of words, but words in law are not an act, therefore the speaker is not criminally responsible." Section 249.

With the intention of causing death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.—The essence of murder is that there must be the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Presumption of intention depends on the facts of each case. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 169=7 Pat. 638=29 Cr. L. J. 17=106 Ind. Cas. 433=9 P. L. T. 286; see also A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 108=21 S. L. R. 159=28 Cr. L. J. 61; A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 292=11 L. L. J. 20=31 Cr. L. J. 41. Onus of proving absence of intention to cause death is on the accused when he deals violent blows on head causing fracture. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 63=28 Cr. L. J. 45=99 Ind. Cas. 77; see also A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 637=30 P. L. R. 357=30 Cr. L. J. 662=116 Ind. Cas. 707. Where no intention to cause death is found the offence is culpable homicide under s. 304. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 526=28 Cr. L. J. 590=9 L. L. J. 365. When the accused commits an imminently dangerous act, such as bomb throwing, intention to cause death is presumed. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 266=31 Cr. L. J. 290=31 P. L. R. 73=121 Ind. Cas. 726; see also A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 598=6 L. L. J. 62=24 Cr. L. J. 935=75 Ind. Cas. 359. An injury merely likely to cause death does not amount to murder if intention to cause death is absent. A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 174=1 Rang. 285=Bur. L. J. 94=24 Cr. L. J. 919=75 Ind. Cas. 295. The expression "causing death" means putting an end to human life and a man is not guilty of culpable homicide if his intention was directed to a lifeless body. 42 M. 547=37 M. L. J. 17=20 Cr. L. J. 404=51 Ind. Cas. 164. This section says nothing about deliberation or previous preparation but speaks only of intention and knowledge. A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 148=27 Cr. L. J. 62=91 Ind. Cas. 238=2 O. W. N. 862. Motive is irrelevant in murder. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 729=28 Cr. L. J. 258=100 Ind. Cas. 226.

Such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.—If a person causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death the offence comes under s. 299. Gobbar v. Emperor. 7 Pat. 688=9 Pat. L. T. 286=106 Ind. Cas. 433=29 Cr. L. J. 17=A. I. R. 1928 Pat.

With the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death.—In cases of murder, and culpable homicide not amounting to murder there is a distinction between what is likely and what is probable. The distinction is a question of degree of probability. 5 Cr. L. J. 306; 9 P. R. 1891 Cr. The "knowledge" must be a certainty not a probability. The difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 169=7 Pat. 738=29 Cr. L. J. 17=106 Ind. Cas. 433=9 P. L. T. 286.

Five persons armed with dangs assaulted the deceased and beat him to such an extent that one of his thighs became a mass of bruises, fractured both his legs below the knee and also gave him various other minor injuries on the legs and on the trunk which caused death. But no injury was caused to the head and the injuries on the trunk also were minor. Held, that the offence would not come under any of the clauses of s. 300 but would come under third part of s. 299 as the assaulting persons must be credited with a knowledge that the beating that they did actually give to the deceased was likely to cause death. 10 Lah. 477=30 P. L. R. 674=113 Ind. Cas. 333=30 Cr. L. J. 141=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 157. There is a clear distinction between a person causing death by doing an act "with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death", which is culpable homicide within the definition in s. 299 I. P. Code, and causing death by an act known by the person doing it to be "so immediately dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death", which is murder under cl. (4) of section 300. The former includes the latter but the two descriptions are by no means co-extensive. 8 C. P. L. R. Cr. 9. All murder is culpable homicide, but all culpable homicide is not murder. Thus s. 299 covers a wider ground than s. 300. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 282. The last clause of section 299 and the fourth clause of s. 300 must be confined to cases, where no intentional injury has been caused. In cases of murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, there is a distinction between what is likely and what is punishable; because death has resulted from blows it cannot be held in every case that the striker intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The distinction between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder is a question of degree of probability, and depends generally on the nature of the weapon and on the way it is used. U. B. R. 1906. Penal Code, 33=5 Cr. L. J. 306. Where the accused, a young man of 18, knocked his wife down, struck her several times with his fist on the back and, on her falling on the ground, put one knee on her chest, and struck her violently two or three times on the face, causing thereby an extravasation of blood on the brain resulting in her death, held that the accused was only guilty of culpable homicide, not amounting to murder as there was no intention to cause death, and as the bodily injury was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 1 B. 342. But where death has been caused by a savage attack with dangerous weapons an offence under this section has been committed. 7 S. L. R. 83=15 Cr. L. J. 375=23 Ind. Cas. 744; see also A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 244=6 L. L. J. 527=26 Cr. L. J. 398=84 Ind. Cas. 942. Where the accused administered Dhutura poison to facilitate robbery the accused must be presumed to have knowledge that death would be caused. The question of knowledge is a question of fact in the circumstances of each case. A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 518=28 Bom. L. R. 1003=27 Cr. L. J. 1134=97 Ind. Cas. 654. An injury which accelerates the death of a dying man is deemed to be the cause of it. The offender is not responsible for death unless he knew that the condition of the deceased was such that his act was likely to cause death. 19 Cr. L. J. 322=11 S. L. R. 81=44 Ind. Cas. 338 (F. B.); see also 23 Cr. L. J. 345=34 C. L. J. 515=66 Ind. Cas. 1000.

Explanation (1).—"It is only where death is attributable to an injury which the offender did not know would endanger life or would be likely to cause death and which in normal conditions would not do so notwithstanding death being caused the offence will certainly not be culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but simple hurt, and every such case depends upon the existence of abnormal conditions unknown to the person who inflicts the jury." 19 Bom. L. R. 823. See also, 19 Bom. L. R. 902.

This explanation assumes that the bodily injury was inflicted with the intention of causing death or the knowledge that it would be likely to cause death. It was intended to repeat the English rule that an injury which accelerates the death of a dying man is deemed to be the cause of it, and where death has been caused it is no defence that the deceased was suffering from a complaint which would have caused his death in any event. 44 Ind. Cas. 335.

"An offence affecting the life of a person who must soon die, either from a mortal disease or in the course of nature from old age and decay, is not a less offence than one which affects the life of a person in strong health. The offender causes death in the one case by accelerating that event by a few months or days or hours; in the other case, possibly he hastened the event by many years. The real difference between the two cases is not in point of law, but in respect of the degree of proof requisite to show the cause of death. For where the death of a person who receives some bodily injury while labouring under a disease is the subject of enquiry, the Court in estimating the evidence must consider whether it is sufficiently proved which of the two causes, the disease or the bodily injury to the deceased person is the cause of his dying on the day when his death occurs. It is not necessary (if it were possible) that the evidence should enable the court to apportion the two causes and the degree in which each of them contributes to the result. But the Court must be satisfied (1) that the death at the time when it occurs is not caused solely by the disease; and (2) that it is caused by the bodily injury to this extent, that it is accelerated by such injury. Suppose A is ill of small-pox and gives him pills in such dose that the disease is aggravated and death is accelerated. Z has caused death, notwithstanding that it may be proved that A must have eventually died of the small-pox.—Morgan and Macpherson. If a person was suffering from an injury which would render injuries (which would not have a fatal effect to an ordinary man) fatal to that person, it does necessarily follow, as it would in the case of a healthy man that person affecting those injuries knew it to be likely that death would be caused thereby. 34 C. L. J. 513. Explanation (1) to s. 299 of the Penal Code assumes that the bodily injury was inflicted with the intention of causing death or the knowledge that it would be likely to cause death. It was intended to repeat the English rule that an injury which accelerates the death of a dying man is deemed to be the cause of it. Imperator v. Ismail, 11 S. L. R. 79=44 Ind. Cas. 335=19 Cr. L. J. 319.

Explanation (2).—"In the case supposed, of a bodily injury which when it is inflicted is the sole cause of death in operation, it is explained that although proof be given that the wound or other bodily injury if skilfully treated might not have resulted in death, yet if in fact death is the result, the wound causes death. And it does not avail the offender to prove that the first cause might have been removed or rendered inoperative by the application of proper remedies, and that death might thus have been prevented.

"Proper remedies and skilful treatment" may not be within the reach of the wounded man; or, if they are at hand he may be unable or unwilling to resort to them. But this is immaterial so far as relates to the due interpretation of the words "cause of death." The primary cause which sets in motion some other cause, as the severe wound which induces gangrene or fever—and the ultimate effect, death, are sufficiently connected as cause and effect, notwithstanding that the supervening sickness or disease might have been cured by medical skill. All that it is essential to establish is, that the death has been caused by the bodily injury, and if there be any intervening cause, that it is connected with a sufficient degree of probability with the primary one"—Morgan and Macpherson. Where death is avoidable by proper treatment, the fact does not take away case from operation of s. 299. 140 Ind. Cas. 706=34 Cr. L. J. 99=1932 Cr. C. 697=9 O. W. N. 655=A. I. R. 1932 Oudh. 279.

Explanation (3).—This explanation provides that the causing of the death of a child in the mother's womb is not "homicide." But it may amount to culpable homicide to cause death of a living child if any part of that child has been brought forth, though the child may not have breathed or been completely born. Under the English law complete emergence is necessary to constitute the child a human being. The law in this respect is somewhat wider than the English law. Under this explanation, it must be shown that the child lived and breathed after it had wholly or partially emerged from the mother's womb. 29 P. R. 1915 Cr.

"The life of the child while it remains, wholly within the womb, is a part of the mother's life, and not a separate and distinct existence. But as soon as any part of the child (supposing that it is not a child already without life, a dead foetus) has been brought forth from the womb the child is accounted a living human being to cause whose death may be culpable homicide. It is further explained that this may be so, though the child may not have breathed. The mere fact of having breathed is a very uncertain indication of life in such cases, for it is well-known that many children are wholly brought forth and eventually live, and yet do not breath for sometime after their birth.

"It may be said that a child is not completely born until after the umbilical cord has been severed notwithstanding that the mother has been completely delivered, and that the child is in existence. But it is obvious that to cause the death of such a child, ought to be deemed an offence of the same nature, as the causing of the death of a child one month, one year, or ten years old. The explanation expressly states that complete birth is not requisite. Instead of an uncertain period which it would be difficult to define satisfactorily and which would, in many cases of infanticide greatly add to the difficulty of proof, a definite and readily ascertained point of time (i. e., the time when any part of the child is brought forth) is fixed, to denote when the child may become a subject of culpable homicide.

"If no part of the child has been brought forth, any bodily injury which it receives, however criminal, does not constitute an offence under this section though it may be an offence under subsequent provisions of the chapter (see sections 315 and 316)—and this, whether such injury prevents the child from being born alive, or causes the death of the child afterwards. If any part of the child has been brought forth, the causing of its death may amount to culpable homicide—not because the child in this state has necessarily and in all cases a more independent existence than while it is wholly unborn, or because it is now more likely to live than before (for the part first brought forth may be such as to put the child's life in great peril)—but, as we have already seen, because this is a definite period of time.

"As to the person who causes death,—it is enough in this place to say that, in the absence of proof of unsoundness of mind, incapacity to know the nature of the act done, or of some other of those General Exceptions applicable to homicide which declare the thing done not to be an offence, all persons who are liable to punishment under this code may commit the offence of culpable homicide"—Morgan and

Macpherson. It must be proved that the child breathed after it had emerged from womb. 17 Cr. L. J. 20=46 P. W. R. 1915=29 P. R. 1915=32 Ind. Cas. 148.

300. Except in the cases hereinafter excepted, culpable homicide is murder, if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, or,

2ndly, if it is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused, or,

3rdly, if it is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person, and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death, or,

4thly, if the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid.

Illustrations.

(a) A shoots Z with the intention of killing him. Z dies in consequence. A commits murder.

(b) A, knowing that Z is labouring under such a disease that a blow is likely to cause his death, strikes him with the intention of causing bodily injury. Z dies in consequence of the blow. A is guilty of murder, although the blow might not have been sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause the death of a person in a sound state of health. But if A, not knowing that Z is labouring under any disease, gives him such a blow as would not, in the ordinary course of nature, kill a person in a sound state of health, here A, although he may intend to cause bodily injury, is not guilty of murder, if he did not intend to cause death or such bodily injury as, in the ordinary course of nature, would cause death.

(c) A intentionally gives Z a sword-cut or club-wound sufficient to cause the death of man in the ordinary course of nature. Z dies in consequence. Here A is guilty of murder, although he may not have intended to cause Z's death.

(d) A, without any excuse, fires a loaded cannon into a crowd of persons, and kills one of them. A is guilty of murder, although he may not have had a premeditated design to kill any particular individual.

Exception 1.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, whilst deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, causes the death of the person who gave the provocation, or causes the death of any other person by mistake or accident.

The above exception is subject to the following provisos:—

Firstly.—That the provocation is not sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for killing or doing harm to any person.

Secondly.—That the provocation is not given by anything done in obedience to the law, or by a public servant in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant.

Thirdly.—That the provocation is not given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.

Explanation.—Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder is a question of fact.

Illustrations.

(a) A, under the influence of passion, excited by a provocation given by Z, intentionally kills Y, Z's child. This is murder inasmuch as the provocation was not given by the child, and the death of the child was not caused by accident or misfortune in doing an act caused by the provocation.

(b) Y gives grave and sudden provocation to A. A, on this provocation, fires a pistol at Y, neither intending nor knowing himself to be likely to kill Z, who is near him, but out of sight. A kills Z. Here A has not committed murder, but merely culpable homicide.

(c) A is lawfully arrested by Z, a bailiff. A is excited to sudden and violent passion by the arrest, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done by a public servant in the exercise of his powers.

(d) A appears as a witness before Z, a Magistrate. Z says that he does not believe a word of A's deposition, and that A has perjured himself. A is moved to sudden passion by these words, and kills Z. This is murder.

(e) A attempts to pull Z's nose. Z, in the exercise of the right of private defence lays hold of A to prevent him from doing so. A is moved to sudden and violent passion in consequence, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done in the exercise of the right of private defence.

(f) Z strikes B, B is by this provocation excited to violent rage. A, a by-stander, intending to take advantage of B's rage, and to cause him to kill Z, puts a knife into B's hand for that purpose. B kills Z with the knife. Here B may have committed only culpable homicide, but A is guilty of murder.

Exception 2.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, in the exercise, in good faith, of the right of private defence of person or property, exceeds the power given to him by law, and causes the death of the person against whom he is exercising such right of defence, without premeditation, and without any intention of doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of such defence.

Illustration.

Z, attempts to horsewhip A, not in such a manner as to cause grievous hurt to A. A draws out a pistol. Z persists in the assault. A believing in good faith that he can by no other means prevent himself from being horsewhipped, shoots Z dead. A has not committed murder, but only culpable homicide.

Exception 3.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, being a public servant, or aiding a public servant, acting for the advancement of public justice, exceeds the powers given to him by law, and causes death by doing an act which he, in good faith believes to be lawful and necessary for the due discharge of his duty as such public servant, and without ill-will towards the person whose death is caused.

Exception 4.—Culpable homicide is not murder if it is committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, and without the offender's having taken undue advantage, or acted in a cruel or unusual manner.

Explanation.—It is immaterial in such cases which party offers the provocation, or commits the first assault.

Exception 5.—Culpable homicide is not murder when the person whose death is caused, being above the age of eighteen years, suffers death, or takes the risk of death, with his own consent.

Illustration.

A, by instigation, voluntarily causes Z, a person under eighteen years of age, to commit suicide. Here on account of Z's youth, he was incapable of giving consent to his own death. A has therefore abetted murder.

Scope of the section. Culpable homicide is the general name given to a variety of offences, of characters so different that the Code visits them with discriminating punishments, ranging from capital punishment to a light fine. All these however, have these in common, that the death of a human being has been caused by some act or illegal omission which deserves punishment. There is one great division of the offence.—the division between culpable homicide which is murder, and culpable homicide which does not amount to murder. According to the definition given in this section culpable homicide is murder unless it be one of the mitigated descriptions of homicide mentioned in the five exceptions given in this section. The definition requires that we should consult.—for the definition of culpable homicide in the expanded form which it appears in the present section, and then the several exceptions containing the mitigated circumstances which reduce the offence of murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Each of the four clauses of the section requires that the act which causes death should be done intentionally, or with the knowledge or means of knowing that the death is a natural consequence of the act. Each clause is explained by illustration. It will be noticed that this definition of murder does not recognise different degrees of the offence. The killing of a human being with the intention or knowledge mentioned in the definition, is not less murder when it is committed under such circumstances as show no specific intention to kill, than when it is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing. But the Courts or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing. But the Courts in awarding punishment for murder (see section 302) are enabled to distinguish between the several gradations of enormity which the cases may disclose.—Morgan and Macpherson. Culpable homicide is not murder unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention stated, in one or more of the four illustrations appended to it, one for each clause. If the question is whether the injuries caused in a case are sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the Court has to take it into consideration the nature of the weapon used and the injuries caused. 75 Ind. Cas. 689=1723 Lah. 317. In a charge of murder it is wholly immaterial that the motive is inadequate. 28 Cr. L. J. 258=100 Ind. Cas. 226=7 A. I. C. R. 371. Where facts are clear it is immaterial that no motive has been proved. 32 C. W. N. 345=47 C. L. J. 240=104 Ind. Cas. 482=29 Cr. L. J. 546=A. I. R. 928 Cal. 430. If an act does not fall within any of those explanations and of the exceptions the act is murder, but if it does fall under one or other of those explanations any of the exceptions in s. 300 the act is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 15=3 Luck. 244=28 Cr. L. J. 1029=106 Ind. Cas. 213. A case may fall within more than one exception to s. 300. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 136=1927 M. W. N. 796=29 Cr. L. J. 7=106 Ind. English law.—In English law, it shall be sufficient in any indictment for murder to charge that the defendant did feloniously, wilfully and of his malice, aforethought, kill and murder the deceased. So murder is the unlawful killing, by any person of sound memory and discretion, of any person under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied by law. Russ. Cr. p. 655. This malice aforethought which distinguishes murder from other species of homicide is not limited to particular ill-will against the person slain but means that the fact has been attended with such circumstances as are the ordinary symptoms of a wicked, depraved, and malignant spirit; a heart regardless of social duty, and deliberately bent upon mischief. Any formed design of doing mischief may be called malice; and therefore not only killing from premeditated hatred or revenge against the person killed; but also, in many other cases, killing accompanied with circumstances that shew the heart to be previously wicked, is adjudged to be killing of malice aforethought, and consequently murder. Malice may be either express or implied by law. Express malice is, when one person kills another with a sedate deliberate mind and formed design evidenced by external circumstances, which disclose the inward intention; as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do the deceased some bodily harm. And malice is implied by law from any deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. Thus where a man kills another suddenly without any, or without considerable provocation, the law implies malice; considering that no person, unless of an abandoned heart, would be guilty of such an act upon a slight, or no apparent cause. So if a man wilfully poisons another the law presumes malice though no particular enmity can be proved. Russ. Cr. 656. There are according to English law six forms of mens rea which have been held to be sufficiently wicked to constitute murderous malice. They are the following :—

- (i) Intention to kill the particular person, who in fact, was killed.
- (ii) Intention to kill a particular person, but not the one who actually was killed.
- (iii) Intention to kill, but without selecting any particular individual as the victim. This has been conveniently called universal malice.
- (iv) Intention only to hurt—and not kill—but to hurt by means of an act which is intrinsically likely to kill.
- (v) Intention to do an act which is intrinsically likely to kill though without any purpose of thereby inflicting any hurt whatever. Such cases are usually due to the state of mind which Austin specifically terms "rashness."
- (vi) Intention to commit a felonious act even though it be unlikely to kill. The illustration which Foster gives of this sixth rule is that of a man shooting at a fowl to steal it, and thereby accidentally killing a bystander.—Kenney's Outlines of Cr. Law.

The law of British India, differing from the Law of England, does not regard every case of homicide as prima facie murder; it throws on the prosecution the burden of proving a certain intent of knowledge constituting an act a murder. I Weir. 288.

Culpable homicide amounting to murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—Causing death by an act, which the offender knows to be likely to cause death is culpable homicide not amounting to murder, while causing death with the knowledge that the most probable result of the act done will be death or such bodily injury as will, in the ordinary course of nature, cause death, constitutes murder. L. B. R. (1893—1900), 112. Murder as defined in clauses 2 and 3 of this section, is only an amplification of that part of s. 299, which speaks of an act done "with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death." 18 P. R. 1893 Cr. All murder is culpable homicide, but all culpable homicide is not murder. Subject to the five exceptions to this section, every act that falls within one or more of the four clauses of that section is murder, and also falls within the definition of culpable homicide in section 299. Every act that falls within any or more of the four clauses of this section, in respect of which there co-exist one or more of the sets of circumstances described in the five exceptions to that section, is by that fact, taken out of this section, but the act notwithstanding continues to be within s. 299, and since it is not murder, it is culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Every act that falls within s. 299 and does not fall within this section, since it is not murder, is culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 6 Ind. Cas. 251 = 11 Cr. L. J. 295. A man who intentionally strikes such a blow with a stick, as is sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, commits culpable homicide, although he may not have intended to cause death. A. W. N. 1881 105. If an act which an accused person is said to have committed does fall within the explanations to section 300, and does not fall within any of the exceptions therein, the act is murder; but, if it does fall under one or other of the explanations and also falls within the exceptions, the act is one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Luck C. 579.

In delivering the judgment in the case of Queen v. Gora Chand Gope, 5 W. R. Cr. 45, Sir Barnes Peacock C.J. said: "There are in my opinion several important distinctions between murder and culpable homicide. An offence cannot amount to murder unless it falls within the definition of culpable homicide: for section 300 merely points out the cases in which culpable homicide is murder". But any offence may amount to culpable homicide without amounting to murder.

"Culpable homicide is not murder if the case falls within any of the exceptions mentioned in section 300.

"Causing death with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person, if the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, in my opinion, falls within the words of section 292 'with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death,' and is culpable homicide. It is also murder, unless the case falls within one of the exceptions in section 300, clause 3.

"Causing death by doing an act with the knowledge that such act is likely to cause death is culpable homicide, but it is not murder even if it does not fall within any of the exceptions mentioned in section 300, unless it falls within clause 2, 3, or 4 of section 300, that is to say, unless the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused, or with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person; and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or unless the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

"In speaking of acts, I of course include illegal omissions.

"There are many cases falling within the words of section 299, 'or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death' that do not fall within the 2nd, 3rd or 4th clause of section 300, such for instance as the offences described in sections 279, 280, 281, 282, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, and 289 if the offender knows that his act or illegal omission is likely to cause death, and if in fact it does cause death. But although he may know that the act or illegal omission is so dangerous that it is likely to cause death, it is not murder, even if death is caused thereby unless the offender knows that it must in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or unless he intends thereby to cause death, or such bodily injury as is described in clause 2 or 3 of section 300.

"As an illustration, suppose a gentleman should drive a buggy in a rash and negligent manner, or furiously along a narrow crowded street. He might know that he was likely to kill some person, but he might not intend to kill any one or to cause bodily injury to any one. In such a case, if he should cause death, I apprehend he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless it should be found, as a fact that he knew that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability, cause death or such bodily injury. etc., as to bring the case within the 4th clause of section 300. In an ordinary case of furious driving, the facts would scarcely warrant such a finding. If found guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, the offender might be punished to the extent of transportation for ten years, or imprisonment for ten years with fine (see sections 304 and 59); or if a European or American, he would be subject to penal servitude instead of transportation. It would not be right in such a case that the offender should not be liable to capital punishment for murder. The first part of section 304 would not apply to the case. That applies only to cases which would be murder if not falling within one of the exceptions in section 300. If a man should drive a buggy furiously, not merely along a crowded street, but intentionally into the midst of a crowd of persons, it would probably be found as a fact that he knew that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury, etc., as in clause 4, section 300.

"From the fact of a man's doing an act with the knowledge that he is likely to cause death, it may be presumed that he did it with the intention of causing death, if all the circumstances of the case justify such a presumption; but I should never presume an intention to cause death merely from the fact of furious driving in a crowded street in which the driver might know that his act would be likely to cause death. Presumption of intention must depend upon the facts of each particular case.

"Suppose a gentleman should cause death by furiously driving up a Railway Station. Suppose that it should be proved that he had business in a distant part of the country, say at the opposite-terminus; that he was intending to go by a particular train; and that he could not arrive at his destination in time for his business by any other train; that at the time of the furious driving it wanted only two minutes to the time of the train's starting; that the road was so crowded that he must have known that he was likely to run over some one and to cause death. Would any one under the circumstances presume that his intention was to cause death. Would it not be more reasonable to presume that his intention was to catch the train? If the Judge or Jury should find that his intention was to save the train, but that he must have known that he was likely to cause death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless they should also find that the risk of causing death was such that he must have known and did know that his act must, in all probability cause death, etc., within the meaning of Clause 4, section 300.

"If they should so further, and infer from the knowledge that he was likely to cause death, he would be guilty of murder and liable to culpable homicide." See also 1 B. 342, 344, 346; (1928) 10 Lah. 477; 32 P. R. 1887; 27 P. R. 1883; 3 A. 776 (778); 33 Cr. L. J. 141. The difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. 7 Pat. 638=9 Pat. L. T. 286=106 Ind. Cas. 433=29 Cr. L. J. 17=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 169.

Except in cases.—Without any exculpatory circumstances, other than those mentioned in the five exceptions, vide Suba v. Empress, 40 P. R. 1887 Cr.; 47 P. R. 1887. In deciding the question whether a transaction amounts to murder or to culpable homicide, not amounting to murder, the Judge should not conclude that the offence committed is murder, because there is nothing to show that the accused's act does not come within any of the exceptions mentioned in s. 300. 1 C. W. N. 545. Where a Court finds that an act causing death was done merely with the knowledge that the doer was likely by such act to cause death, as the act does not come within s. 300 there is nothing upon which the exception to s. 300, can operate. 9 P. R. 1891 Cr. When the accused gave such a blow to the deceased on the head which caused the death of the deceased it was for him to show that it was removed from the category of murder by one of the exceptions to the section. 17 A. L. J. 866=52 Ind. Cas. 224=20 Cr. L. J. 608; see also 17 A. L. J.

985=53 Ind. Cas. 495; 20 Cr. L. J. 767. There can be no conviction for murder or for culpable homicide not amounting to murder where the corpus delicti is not established. Culpable homicide is murder where the party inflicting the injury does it either with the intention that it should cause death or with the knowledge that it may do so. It will not be murder if the case falls within any of the exceptions noted under section 300 I. P. Code. Where there is neither intention, knowledge nor likelihood that the injury will or can result in death, the offence would be neither murder, nor culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but would be voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 322 and the conviction in such a case would be either under s. 325 or s. 326 according to the nature of the weapon used. 63 Ind. Cas. 450=22 Cr. L. J. 658.

Clause (1).—Act by which the death is caused, etc.—According to this definition, culpable homicide is murder, unless it be one of the mitigated descriptions of homicide mentioned in the five exceptions which follow (Morgan and Macpherson). Clause (a) of section 299 and clause (1) of this section show that where there is an intention to kill the offence is always murder. 1 B. 342. The word "act" includes omission. Vide s. 33. So where it was proved that the accused withheld all nourishment from a child with the intention of causing its death, and the child died in consequence, held that the prisoner was guilty of murder. A. W. N. 1883, 36; see also 5 N. W. P. 44; A. W. N. 1883, 231; 18 P. R. 1870 Cr.

The word "death" denotes the death of a human being (s. 46). The murdered person must be a person in being i. e., not a mere unborn child. [Reg v. Monks, C. C. C. Sessions Papers, (1870) L. xxii, 424; 21 Cr. L. J. 85=21 Bom. L. R. 1101=54 Ind. Cas. 485]. There can be no murder of a child which dies before being born or even whilst being born; only one that has been born and moreover born alive. Partial extrusion is not sufficient; if but a foot be unextricated, there can be no murder; the extrusion must be complete, the whole body of the infant must have been brought into the world. (Rex v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 330). But it is not necessary that the umbilical cord should have been severed. (Rex v. Crutchley, 7 C. & P. 814; Reg v. Reeves, 9 C. & P. 25). And to be born alive the child must have been still in a living state after it had quitted the body of the mother. Hence that life then still existed must be actually proved; and this may be done by giving evidence of any cry, or breathing, or pulsation, or movement, after extrusion. But it is not necessary that the child should have continued to live until it was severed from the mother; or even until it began to breathe. Rex v. Sellis, 7 C. & P. 853. For a child may not breathe until sometime after full extrusion. (Rex v. Brain, 6 C. & P. 349); though, on the other hand, infants sometimes breathe, and even cry, before they are fully extricated. The birth must thus precede the death; but it need not prove the injury. (Reg v. Senior, 1 Moody 346). Thus an act which causes a child to be born much earlier than in the natural course, so that the child when born is rendered much less capable of living and accordingly soon dies, may amount itself to murder. Reg v. West, 2 C. & K. 784.—Kenney's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 129. It must be proved that the child breathed after it had emerged from womb. 17 Cr. L. J. 20=46 P. W. R. 1915=29 P. R. Cr. 1915=33 Ind. Cas. 148.

Intention of causing death.—Where the murder of a newly born child is deliberately committed in cold blood the murder is as serious an offence in the eye of the law as that of a grown-up person, and deserves to be as severely punished. R. v. Irowa, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 401; R. v. Basapa, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 401. In this case death was due to strangling. The deceased was dragged along with a ligature round his neck. The Sessions Judge was of opinion that the original intention of the accused was to merely maltreat the deceased, but that in their excitement their passion got the better of them and they strangled him either before they dragged him along or in this process. He thought the crime was not a premeditated and cold-blooded murder and that therefore none of the accused were guilty under s. 302, Penal Code. He convicted the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Held, the Sessions Judges' view of law was wrong because the act of strangulation was murder. Those persons who were engaged in committing it must either have intended to cause death or have known that it was so imminently dangerous that it would in all probability cause death. The conviction should therefore have been of murder and not of culpable homicide of the lesser degree. 23 P. R. 1890 Cr. Mere absence of premeditation will not reduce a crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 3 W. R. Cr. 40; 23 P. R. 1890 Cr. No constructive but actual intention is required to constitute murder. 5 W. R. Cr. 42. The intention in this section does not require any forethought. 62 P. R. 1887 Cr. The presumption of law is that a man intends the natural and inevitable consequences of his own act. 1 Weir 300. Inference of intent can be made from the pre-existing enmity between the accused and the deceased. 85 P. R. 1866 Cr.

Proof of motive or previous ill-will is not necessary to sustain a conviction for murder. 7 W. R. Cr. 60; but see 10 W. R. Cr. 11; see also A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 1005; 131 Ind. Cas. 439=1931 Cr. C. 241=8 O. W. N. 107=32 Cr. L. J. 697=6 Luck. 475=A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 119. It is not murder, if a person kills another without intending to take his life, and if the acts done are not such as conclusively indicate an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. 5 W. R. Cr. 41. In a case of murder, it is for the Court to consider whether the whole case does not disclose circumstances which negative the existence of a guilty intention or knowledge, which is a constituent part of the offence of culpable homicide. 22 P. R. 1868 Cr.

A man's intention can only be gathered from his acts. Death from a blow or blows on the head is probably, as a rule, associated by people unskilled in medical science only with the breaking of the skull. Ignorance of the actual causes which may bring about another's death in consequence of a blow cannot affect the question of the striker's knowledge and intention when striking the blow. If actual knowledge and experience do not do so, instinct at least tells every man that to hit another human being any violent blow on the head may possibly result, or is likely to result or will result, in serious injury to the person struck; but knowledge, belief or expectation of the amount of injury that may be caused must depend upon what is used in inflicting the blow, and the force with which the blow is delivered. A man is presumed by law to intend the ordinary and natural as well as the necessary consequences of his acts. Every man giving another a very violent blow on the head with his fist must be taken to know that the result of his blow may be, and even is likely to be, injury to the other, sufficient to kill him, but unless it must be taken that ordinary knowledge, experience or instinct tell a man that such a result is an ordinary and, therefore a probable consequence of so striking another man, the striker's act would not amount to a greater crime than culpable homicide, for, at most, it would be an act done with the knowledge that he was only likely to cause death, and an intention to cause more than he knew was likely, could not be imputed to him, unless there was further evidence showing what his actual intention was. Every man must be taken to know that, if he repeats violent blows with anything substantial and hard on another man's head, he will probably either kill the man, or cause him such injury as is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 2 L. B. R. 125=1 Cr. L. J. 184; see also A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 930=1933 Cr. C. 1389; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 883; 33 P. L. R. 279=33 Cr. L. J. 580=1932 Cr. C. 422. If intention to kill is present, act amounts to murder. If it is absent, it is only culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 338=1933 Cr. C. 1148=146 Ind. Cas. 315. In the absence of direct evidence intention of the accused can be gathered from established facts. 137 Ind. Cas. 282=33 Cr. L. J. 457=33 P. L. R. 1=A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 189.

The decision of the question whether the act of the accused amounts to murder or not must rest upon whether he must be held to have intended to cause bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, or whether he only intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. 3 L. B. R. 122=3 Cr. L. J. 355. When an act is done with the intention of causing bodily injury and that injury is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death and it does actually cause death, the act is murder, although the person who committed the act may not have known that it was likely to cause death. 1 J. G. 59. Every sane person of the age of discretion is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own acts. In deciding what the natural and probable consequences of an act are the Court will presume that every actual consequence is a natural and probable consequence unless the contrary is affirmatively shown. 23 Cr. L. J. 313=66 Ind. Cas. 665=(1922) Nag. 141. Where two persons armed with dangerous weapons attacked the deceased on the head, they must be deemed to have intended to cause death. 75 Ind. Cas. 359=24 Cr. L. J. 935=1923 Lah. 598; see also 35 P. L. R. 715=1934 Cr. C. 1093=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 741. Where the injury is by a club-wound, irrespective of intention the person is guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 684=26 Cr. L. J. 1491=90 Ind. Cas. 147. Where a number of men armed with lathis make a concerted attack upon another man and practically kill him on the spot inflicting injuries to the head as result of blows which must have been struck either with the intention to kill or at any rate with the intention to cause hurt, such as the striker must have known to be imminently likely to result in the death of the person struck in the case at least of the ringleaders the penalty prescribed by the law as the proper penalty in cases of murder will be inflicted. 45 A. 130=71 Ind. Cas. 234=24 Cr. L. J. 106=1923 A. 88.

An injury that is merely likely to cause death does not of necessity amount to murder. The act must be done with the intention mentioned in s. 302. Where the degree of likelihood is not sufficiently high, the intention does not extend to the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death the offence is only the culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1 Rang. 285=75 Ind. Cas. 295=24 Cr. L. J. 919=2 Bur. L. J. 94. Culpable homicide is not committed unless the agent either has the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death or has the knowledge that he is likely to cause death. 11 O. L. Motive though not a sine qua non for bringing the offence home to the accused is relevant and important on the question of intention. 32 C. W. N. 345=47 C. L. J. 240=A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 430. The rule of English Criminal Law that one must be taken to intend the natural and probable consequences of his act is not always quite easy to apply to the Indian Criminal law in view of the distinction that the Indian Penal Code draws between intention and knowledge. It should also be noted that on the question of knowledge much depends on the intellectual capacity of the actor. Ibid. The circumstance of an act of murder being apparently motive-less is not a ground from which the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence or homicidal tendency can be safely inferred. 112 Ind. Cas. 222=29 Cr. L. J. 1306. Where the accused deliberately lay in wait for the deceased intending to beat him with lathis on account of enmity, and in fact did beat him with lathis and the deceased died on account of such beating. Held, that the intention of the accused must have been to cause death or such injuries as would naturally result in death. 118 Ind. Cas. 190=30 Cr. L. J. 890=A. I. R. 1929 A. 707.

Clause (2)—With the intention of causing such bodily injury. etc.—
 “The essence of clause (2) appears to me to be found in the words “knows to be likely” and “the persons to whom the harm is caused.” The offence is murder, if the offender knows that the particular person injured is likely, either from peculiarity of constitution, or immature age, or other special circumstance, to be killed by an injury which would ordinarily cause death. The illustration given in the section is the following :—A knowing that Z is labouring under such a disease that a blow is likely to cause his death, strikes him with the intention of causing bodily injury, Z dies in consequence of the blow. A is guilty of murder, although the blow might not have been sufficient in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death of a person in sound state of health.” Per Melville J. in R v. Govinda, 1 B. 342. As to the application of this clause vide illustration (b) and 4 L. B. R. 132=7 Cr. L. J. 410. Murder as defined in clauses 2 and 3 of s. 300 I. P. Code, is only an application of that part of section 299 I. P. Code, which speaks of an act done ‘with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.’ 18 P. R. 1893 Cr. An offence may amount to culpable homicide but not murder even though none of the exceptions in s. 300 are applicable to the case. Clauses (2) and (3) of this section imply a direct mental intention and a special degree of criminality. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 239. For cases in which the right of private defence was exceeded, vide 64 Ind. Cas. 133; 8 M. L. T. 462; 12 C. L. J. 81; 13 Cr. L. J. 782=17 Ind. Cas. 414; 3 A. 253; 7 W. R. Cr. 73; A. I. When the accused, husband and wife, in attempting to protect the latter from attempted rape by the deceased, killed him, held, that the right of private defence extended to the causing of death in such case and that no offence was committed. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 867. Where the accused knowing its effect administered arsenic to a boy nine years of age with the object of preventing the father of the boy from appearing as a witness against himself in a criminal case, but in such quantity that the boy died in the course of three days. Held, that he was guilty of murder, though his intention might not have been to cause death. 40 A. 360=16 A. L. J. 178=44 Ind. Cas. 636=19 Cr. L. J. 382.

The word "knowledge" in section 300, clause 2, I. P. Code imports certainty and not a mere probability. 7 Pat. 638 = 9 Pat. L. T. 286 = 106 Ind. Cas. 433 = 29 Cr. L. J. 17 = A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 169. If a person stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdominal walls and the internal viscera he must be held, whatever his station of life to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 108 Ind. Cas. 268 = 29 Cr. L. J. 369 = 10 A. I. Cr. 37.

Clause (3)—With the intention of causing bodily injury to any personsufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death—in order that culpable homicide may amount to murder under this clause the prosecution must prove that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. L. B. R. (1893—1900) 452. The offence is culpable homicide, if the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is likely to cause death ; it is murder, if such injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. The distinction is fine, but appreciable. It is much the same distinction as between clause (c) of section 299 and clause (4) of this section. It is a question of degree of probability. Practically, it will generally resolve itself into a consideration of the nature of the weapon used. A blow from the fist or a stick on a vital part may be likely to cause death, a wound from a sword on a vital part is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. 1 B. 342. The accused struck a woman with a heavy billet of wood causing a fracture of the skull. She fell down senseless and died, subsequently, without having recovered consciousness. Held, that, as a fracture of the skull was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as is referred to in the third clause of section 300 of the Penal Code. 1 N. L. R. 134 = 2 Cr. L. J. 746. A medical officer's opinion that the injuries inflicted were not serious, which is based upon a misconception of facts, should be disregarded when the evidence shows that the injuries inflicted were one inch deep and they pierced the plura, which in the ordinary course of events, is sufficient to cause death. 16 Cr. L. J. 543 = 29 Ind. Cas. 671. An accused's intention should be inferred from his act, but not solely from the consequences of that act, The result of cutting a man on the head with a heavy chopper being generally death, the accused must be taken to have known that, that is the natural consequence of such an act, and that he must therefore be presumed to have intended to cause death. 4 L. B. R. 306 = 9 Cr. L. J. 5. In all cases where death results as a result of blows given on head with a blunt weapon such as a stick, the intention of the assailant must be judged by the circumstances under which the blows were delivered, the weapon used, the force with which the blows were inflicted and the extent of the injuries caused. A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 100 = 35 Cr. L. J. 1112 = 1934 Cr. C. 573.

Certain snake-charmers by professing themselves to be able to cure snake bites induced several persons to let themselves be bitten by a poisonous snake. From the effects of the bite, three of those persons died. Held, that the offence was murder under clauses 2 and 3 of s. 300 of Penal Code, unless it could be brought within the fifth exception to that section. If the prisoners, really believing themselves to have the powers they professed to have, induced the deceased to consent to take the risk of death the offence would be culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 3 B. In order that culpable homicide may amount to murder under s. 300 (3), the prosecution must prove that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. L. B. R. (1893—1900). 452. Where the accused had given to the deceased some substance which caused his death, but which the accused alleged to have been administered with intent to bring madness, held that, as the person knew that his act was likely to cause death, he was guilty of murder 8. P. R. 1869 Cr. Any act of stabbing into what are ordinarily considered to be vital parts of the body prima facie falls within s. 300 (3), Penal Code. The intention with which such an act is done must be gathered from the act itself, and if a person strikes another in a vital part with a cutting instrument, it must be held that the striker's intention is to cause such bodily injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 2 L. B. R. 63.

Where A and his party attacked B, a strongly built man of about thirty five years of age, in a violent and determined manner, inflicting not less than sixteen wounds on his body and causing severe ruptures of his spleen which was in a healthy condition, and so caused his death, held, these facts leave no doubt that A and his party who attacked B either intended to cause B's death, or that they attacked him in such a brutal manner, regardless of consequences well knowing that they would be likely to cause death, and that the offence committed by A and his party therefore amounted to murder. 37 C. 315=6 Ind. Cas. 921=11 Cr. L. J. 417. Owing to a quarrel which the deceased had with the accused, the latter armed himself with an iron-shod stick and struck one blow with it on the head of the deceased which caused his death. A man who cuts another, even on the leg with such a ferocity and with such a weapon as to cause such an injury as that which the deceased received must be presumed to intend to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and if death results is guilty of murder unless the case is shown to fall within the exception provided in the Code, 2 Bur. L. J. 103=1923 Rang. 247. A stab in the abdomen with sufficient force to pierce the abdominal walls is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and if death ensues, the offence committed is murder. 1 Rang. 436. A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 184. A blow on the head with a lathi is certainly likely to cause death and the person who inflicts lathi blow on the head of another person must be presumed to have the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. But it does not necessarily follow that a lathi blow on the head is always sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 7 Pat. 638=9 Pat. L. T. 286=106 Ind. Cas. 433=29 Cr. L. Intention.—No construction but actual intention is required to constitute murder. 5 W. R. Cr. 42. The intention in this section does not require any forethought. 62 P. R. 1887 Cr. Intention necessary for murder is presumed from nature of wound. 144 Ind. Cas. 282=1933 Cr. C. 577=34 Cr. L. J. 747=A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 95. Premeditation.—Mere absence of premeditation will not reduce a crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 3 W. R. Cr. 40; see also 23 P. R. 1890 Cr.

Clause 4.—Person committing the act knows etc.—Clause (c) of section 299 and clause (4) of this section are intended to apply (but they are not necessarily limited) to cases in which there is no intention to cause death or bodily injury. Furious driving, firing at a mark near a public road, would be cases of this description. Whether the offence is culpable homicide or murder, depends upon the degree of risk to human life. If death is a likely result, it is culpable homicide: if it is the most palpable result, it is murder. 1 B. 342. It may be useful here to point out that the Indian Penal Code contemplates that when an act is culpable homicide, whether amounting to murder, or not amounting to murder, by reason of the act being done with the knowledge described in clause (3) of s. 299 (or with the knowledge described in clause 4 of s. 300, which knowledge satisfies the definition in clause 3 of s. 299), an intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death must be absent. When intention of either kind co-exists with the knowledge described, the knowledge merges in the intention, and a higher degree of guilt is imputable. That the degree of guilt is higher when a murderous intention exists (which intention seems to be deemed to impart the specified knowledge), and is lower when the knowledge is unaccompanied by such intention, seems a necessary inference from the language of s. 304 as to punishment. 32 P. R. 1887. This clause says nothing about intention. 31 P. R. 1914; 73 Ind. Cas. 49. This clause appears to be designed to provide for that class of cases where the acts resulting in death are calculated to put lives of many persons in jeopardy without being armed at any one in particular, and are perpetrated with a full consciousness of the probable consequence. As, for example, where death is caused by firing a loaded gun into a crowd, by poisoning a well from which people are accustomed to draw water, by opening the draw of a bridge just as a railway passenger train is about to pass over it. In such and the like cases, the imminently dangerous act, the extreme depravity of mind and the regardlessness of human life, properly place the crime upon the same level as the taking of life by deliberate intention. The concluding words of this clause, "and commits such act without any excuse, etc." probably refer to such an act as is contemplated by section 81.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where the accused person caught a boy stealing toddy, and being angry, struck the boy a blow on his forehead with a heavy stick he was carrying in his hands and caused the boy's death, held that the accused should be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, in as much as it was doubtful whether the accused knew more than that a blow with such a stick and with the force used by him was possibly dangerous to life. 1 Weir, 299. The fourth clause of s. 300 of the Penal Code is intended, primarily, and especially, to apply to cause death or bodily injury to any specific person. 1 N. L. R. 134=2 Cr. L. J. 746. Causing death by an act, which the offender knows to be likely to cause death, is culpable homicide not amounting to murder, punishing murder under latter part of s. 300. While causing death with the knowledge that the most probable result of the act done will be death or such bodily injury as will, in the ordinary course of nature cause death, constitute murder punishable under s. 302. L. B. R. (1893—1900), 112. S with the intention of killing N gave him poisoned sweat-meet. N, after eating a little, threw the rest away and this was picked up by R, who ate it and died. Held, that S was guilty of the murder of R. 1912 M. W. N. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 833=11 M. L. T. 127=13 Cr. L. J. 145. The intention of causing death can be inferred from reasonable and probable result of the act or conduct of the accused. If death is caused, even though there is no desire on the part of the accused to kill the deceased, they must be taken to have had the knowledge that their act must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. 11 A. L. J. 926=14 Cr. L. J. 685=35 A. 560=21 Ind. Cas. 1005. The cases in which the fourth clause of s. 300, Penal Code, has any application, are extremely rare, and though it is not easy, and perhaps not desirable, to attempt to define with any strictness the kind of cases in which that clause comes in still there is one very broad distinction between it and the first three clauses—in the latter the important thing is an intention to kill or hurt, while the fourth clause says nothing about intention. 263 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 610=31 P. R. 1914 Cr.=25 Ind. Cas. 522=45 P. W. R. 1914 Cr. As regards the true construction of the words "without any excuse in this clause" vide 40 P. R. 1888 Cr; see also 47 P. R. 1887. Men attacking opponents with spears and vaholas must be held to have knowledge that they are likely to inflict injuries as will result in death and are guilty under s. 302. 1933 Cr. C. 396=A. I. Where a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure a miscarriage and death resulted, and it was not proved that the accused knew that the drug would be likely to cause death, etc., they were acquitted of murder and convicted of an offence under s. 314 of the Penal Code. 10 W. R. Cr. 59. Where Cl. 4 of s. 300 is applicable at all, it is (1) after negating the application of all the previous clauses, (2) or on a double finding of facts (a) that the act was one of extraordinary recklessness, and (b) that the act was wholly inexcusable. The exceptions to s. 300 are equally applicable to cl. 4 as to the other clauses. The intention mentioned in s. 300 does not require some previous design or fore-thought of murder. The intention spoken of is actual intention, the existing intention of the moment and is proved by or inferred from, the acts of the accused and the circumstances of the case irrespective of the question of the applicability of any of the exceptions to the section. Per Powell J in 62 P. R. 1887 Cr. The fourth clause is not applicable to a person who does the fatal act with the intention of causing death, or the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Ibid, per Plowden J.

Under the influence of drink and apparently without any motive, two persons setting upon a third brutally assaulted him and caused his death. They were convicted under s. 302, Penal Code, but one of them was sentenced to death and the other to transportation for life. On appeal by them, held that neither s. 325 nor s. 304A. Penal Code, applied to the case, but that, having regard to the merciless nature of the beating inflicted on the deceased, they must, in spite of their intoxication, be held to have had the knowledge referred to in s. 300 (fourthly) and that their act was clearly murder. 28 P. R. 1917 Cr.=35 P. W. R. 1917 Cr. In the absence of any evidence to indicate that a blow was given on a more vital part it must be held that the offender inflicted the blow where he intended. The fourth para of s. 300 I. P. Code, can never be invoked in a case where there was intention of causing specific bodily injury to a particular person. Illustration (d) shows that it only applies to a case of dangerous action without an intention to cause specific bodily injury to a person. 9 O. L. J. 490=26 O. C. 18=73 Ind. Cas. 49=24 Cr. L. J. 513. Having regard to the extent to which Dhatara poisoning takes place in India there is very adequate ground for attributing to ordinary Indians a knowledge of the dangerous results that may occur from administering it. In such cases the burden of proving that they were not possessed of the ordinary knowledge of adults is on the person alleging it. 28 Bom. L. R. 1003=97 Ind. Cas. 654=27 Cr. L. J. 1134.

Constitutes murder.—To constitute murder, there must have been the intention to cause death, or the knowledge that death would be the most probable result of the act done by the accused and such intent and knowledge should be set out in the charge. L. B. R. (1893-1900) 328. The knowledge that an act is likely to cause death does not constitute the offence of murder, but it must be proved that the act was done with the knowledge that it must in all probability cause death. 6 N. W. P. 26; see also 75 Ind. Cas. 689. Where in an attack on deceased with sticks, several contusions are caused on head of which first three are fatal, offence was held to fall under s. 302. 142 Ind. Cas. 901=34 Cr. L. J. 462=32 P. L. R. 718=1932 Cr. C. 820=A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 606. So also in case of stabbing in chest or abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate such structures, the offence prima facie amounts to murder. 14 P. L. T. 464=1933 Cr. C. 1079=A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 508. In the course of a murderous attack on his wife by the accused, the former ran to the deceased woman for protection and clasped her arms round her waist. The accused thereupon gave a fatal stab to the deceased with the sole object of making her let go his wife, so that he might wreck his vengeance on her. The accused had no quarrel with the deceased and had no intention of killing her. Held, that the accused was only guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as he did not intend to inflict such injury on the deceased as was likely to cause her death or was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause her death. 1912 M. W. N. 193=13 Ind. Cas. 817=13 Cr. L. J. 129. A person, who caused death by stabbing with a knife in such a way that the knife penetrated the cavity of the chest of the person stabbed, must be presumed to have known that he was likely by his act to cause death; and such a person should be at least found guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 300. Where it is clear that the act by which the death of the accused was caused was so dangerous that it must be presumed that the accused knew it to be likely to cause death, then, unless the accused rebuts this presumption, he must be convicted under s. 299, and if the case does not fall within the exceptions specified under s. 300, then under s. 300. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 411. If it is not imperatively necessary, in order to justify a conviction for murder, that the corpus delicti should be forth coming. 3 A. 383. Before a person can be convicted of murder, it must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, that murder has been perpetrated and that a veritable corpus delicti exists. P. L. R. 1900, 54. Where the whole proof of the corpus delicti consists of uncorroborated statements of the accused, great caution is required in placing reliance upon them. 15 P. R. 1890. There is no rule of law that no person should be convicted of murder, unless the body of the murdered person has been discovered. 6 P. R. 1886 Cr. But the strongest possible evidence, as to the fact of the murder, is required when the dead body is not forth coming. 11 C. 635. The fact that the murdered body was not found is no reason for not passing a sentence of death when the offence of murder is clearly proved. A W. N. 1882. 160; see also 7 W. R. Cr. 14; but see 11 W. R. Cr. 20.

A plea that the accused, who caused the death of the deceased was acting under the impulse of delusion caused by superstitious belief is invalid unless it is shown that the impulse was such as to render him unconscious of what he was doing or to make him ignorant of the fact that the act which he was about to commit was wrong. Otherwise the accused cannot be excepted from criminal liability for the wrongful act. 18 Cr. L. J. 766=41 Ind. Cas. 142. Where the accused caused the death of the deceased by giving an unmerciful thrashing with sticks, smashed both bones of each forearms the right elbow and the right knee cap and occipital area on the right temporal bone of the skull, etc., the act amounted to murder. 3 P. R. Cr. 1919=49 Ind. Cas. 349=20 Cr. L. J. 157. Where a man strikes another on the head with a not very formidable weapon one blow only no greater intention can be attributed to him than that of causing injury likely to cause death. But each case must depend on its own facts, on the circumstances surrounding the assault, on the motives and the particular weapon used. 65 Ind. Cas. 495=23 Cr. L. J. 111. In a case of murder once the Court is satisfied that the murder has been committed and that the accused person has committed it, the question of sentence must be determined by the gravity of the offence irrespective of the circumstances whether the body has or has not been discovered. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 25. Mere fact that they had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside cl. (4) s. 300=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 266.

Exception 1—Principle—"Homicide committed in the sudden heat of passion or great provocation is not murder, although it is an offence which ought to be punished, and which in some cases deserves severe punishment. We have seen that the immaturity of understanding, the unsoundness of mind, or, in certain cases, the intoxication, of the person doing an act, exempts him from all criminal responsibility in respect of the act, and its consequences. The law does not extend this exception to the acts of those who are deprived by passion of the power of self-control; but it grants some indulgence to such persons. It punishes their acts, in order to teach men to entertain a peculiar respect for human life, and in order to give men a motive for accustoming themselves to govern their passions. But ordinarily it does not punish such persons as murderers, when they cause death. For anger is a passion to which good and bad men are both subject, and mere human frailty and infirmity ought not to be punished equally with ferocity or other evil feelings.

"The Indian law commissioners, by whom the Code was framed say—In general we would not visit homicide committed in violent passion which had been suddenly provoked with the highest penalties of the law. We think that to treat a person guilty of such homicide as we should treat a murderer, would be a highly inexpedient course—a course which would shock the universal feeling of mankind and would engage the public sympathy on the side of the delinquent against the law."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Soope.—It is incumbent on an accused person, who seeks to reduce the nature of his crime, by bringing his case under this exception, to prove that the provocation received by him was such as might reasonably be deemed sufficient to deprive him of his self-control, and that the killing took place whilst that absence of self-control lasted and may be fairly attributed to it. 14 C. P. L. R. 188; see also A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 600=35 P. L. R. 588=1934 Cr. C. 927. Where, therefore, grave and sudden provocation is pleaded in a case of murder, the question that the Court has to decide is whether, between the cause of the grave and sudden provocation and the dealing of the fatal blow, there was time for the blood to cool and for reason to resume its seat. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 122; 12 W. R. Cr. 68. When the evidence in a case leaves room for doubt as to whether the accused has committed murder or the lesser offence culpable homicide not amounting to murder, the benefit of that doubt should be given to the accused. (1927) M. W. N. 796.

Deprived of self-control.—"When the derangement of the mind reaches that degree that the judgment and reason cease to hold dominion over it,—their authority being suspended and yielding place to violent and ungovernable passion,—the man who was before a rational being is no longer the master of his own understanding becomes incapable of cool reflection, and ceases to have control over his passions. It is to such a state of mind that the law in judging of acts which cause death, gives indulgent consideration. And no mental perturbation or agitation which falls short of this, and leaves a way to reason and the power of self-control can reduce a murder to an offence within the range of this mitigating exception. Terror or fear, no less than anger, may deprive a man of the power of self-control.

"If the act is not done under the immediate influence of the excitement but after such an interval of time as in the common course of human feelings is sufficient for reflection, or with the intervention of such circumstances as must naturally produce reflection, the exception is inapplicable. However great the provocation, if there is time enough for passion to subside and for reason to interfere and to regain her dominion, the homicide will be murder.

"If a man finding another in the act of adultery with his wife, kills him at the time, the provocation would ordinarily be deemed sufficient to excuse or mitigate his offence. But if he kills the adulterer, deliberately and in revenge, after considerable interval of time has elapsed, this would probably be held to deprive him of the benefit of the exception. The question whether any act of provocation is grave or sudden enough to mitigate an offence is always, it should be remembered, a question of fact, and not one of law.

"Sometimes the act itself which causes death is so deliberate that it cannot proceed merely from the reason being suspended owing to the grave and sudden provocation. Thus putting a rope round the neck of a man who has been knocked down, and strangling him,—or procuring a deadly weapon, thought and contrivance being shown in doing this after provocation given, and again replacing it immediately after the blow has been struck,—in both these cases the act is done from some cause beyond the sudden provocation. The length of time will always be an important consideration in such cases ; and the distance travelled. The existence of an old grudge is also important.

"With respect to the interval of time allowed for passion to subside, it has been observed, that it is much easier to lay down rules for determining what cases are without the limits, than how far exactly those limits extend. It must be remembered that in these cases the immediate object of enquiry is, whether the suspension of reason arising from sudden passion continued from the time of the provocation received, to the very instant of the mortal stroke given. For if, from any circumstance whatever, it appears that the party was reflected, deliberated, or cooled, anytime before the mortal stroke given, or if there was time or opportunity for cooling, the killing will amount to murder, it being attributable to malice and revenge, rather than to human frailty. The following are stated as general circumstances amounting to evidence in disproof of the party's having acted under the influence of passion only. If, between the provocation received and the stroke given, the party giving the stroke fall into other discourse or diversions and continue so engaged, during a reasonable time for cooling ; or if he take up and pursue any other business or design not connected with immediate object of his passion or sub-servient thereto, so that it may be reasonably supposed that his intention, was once called off from the subject of his provocation ; or again, if it appear that he meditated upon his revenge, or used trick or circumvention to effect it which shows a deliberation inconsistent with the excuse of sudden passion ;—in these cases the killing will amount to murder. It may further be observed, in respect of time, that in proportion to the lapse of time between the provocation, and the stroke, less allowance ought to be made for any excess of retaliation, either in the instrument or the manner of it. The mere length of time intervening between the injury and the retaliation is evidence in itself of deliberation." Morgan and Macpherson.

Causes the death of the person who gave the provocation.—"This exception, unlike the general Exceptions of Insanity, Infancy, etc., holds good only against certain persons. Provocation will not mitigate or excuse an act which proceeds from a general determination to injure any man who may come in the offender's way. Suppose a person under provocation to declare that he will stab any man entering or leaving a room,—or that if any man strikes him he will make him repent,—this exception would not avail him, except as against the person provoking him"—Morgan and Macpherson. The question of provocation is purely psychological question. 136 Ind. Causes the death of any other person by mistake or accident.—"Illustrations (a) and (b) belong to this topic. "Passions against one man will not qualify or bring within the exception the homicide of another, unless it proceeds from accident or mistake (see section 80) ; as if the blow aimed at one alights on another. Cases like those which are not infrequent of a person under excitement running amuck and killing all whom he meets, are not mitigated by this exception.

"Where several persons are concerned in the commission of the criminal act which causes death they may be guilty of different offences by means of that act (see section 38). In the illustration (f) appended to the exception now under consideration. A the bystander abets B by intentionally aiding him.

"It will be borne in mind that it is not necessary that the person abetted should have the same guilty intention as that of the abettor" (see section 108, Explanation 3) "Morgan and Macpherson."

First.—"The provocation, however grave and sudden in itself, is not to cloak an act which really proceeds from previous deliberation and design. Suppose A and

B having quarrelled, A says he will not strike but will give B a rupee if he dares to touch him, on which B strikes and A kills him,—or A otherwise invites B to some act of provocation and then kills him for it :—The act being done by A's consent or invitation, given with a view to excuse what he deliberately proposes to do in return, is not sufficient, provocation. Again A without consent or invitation may voluntarily (that is intentionally or by means of which he knows to be likely to have the effect) offer provocation as by introducing in general discourse topics known to be offensive, touching a man's domestic affairs etc. ordinarily a provocation sought on the part of the slayer, would seem rather to aggravate than to mitigate his offence.

"Where the act which causes death appears to be the consequence of premeditation, the exception is inapplicable whether the provocation is sought for or not. If the act does not in truth proceed from the provocation or its consequence, i. e. the deprivation of the power of self-control, it is not mitigated."—Morgan and Macpherson 251.

Secondly.—"A man is not allowed to extenuate murder, however great the provocation he has received if the provocation be given by public servants or other persons who are acting in obedience to the law's commands or are justified by law, or if the provocation be given by public servants in the lawful exercise of their powers. Ministers of Justice especially, and all public servants while in the execution of their offices, are under the peculiar protection of the law. And this protection is not confined to them but extends to private persons who come to their aid and act by their direction.

"We have seen that under the General Exceptions of the Code not only public servants, but all persons, are justified in respect of acts which the law commands or authorizes them to do. (See sections 76-79). Their acts being justified, it follows that resistance is unlawful, and that such acts afford no legal ground of provocation. This is founded in reason and public utility. A man would not quietly submit to an arrest, if the lawful acts of the person empowered to make the arrest should be held to mitigate his homicide by the person to be arrested. The consequence would be, that in every case of resistance the officer would desist and leave business undone. It is plain that if the state makes the duty of A, a police constable, to arrest B, it would be unjust to A, and would paralyze the administration of the law, if it were justifiable for B to kill A, on the plea of provocation etc.

"But the protection of the law being in general extended only to persons who have lawful authority, and who use that authority in a proper manner, this proviso confines within the same limits, those acts which shall be deemed not to constitute a sufficient provocation. Questions of much nicety and difficulty may often arise touching the legality of process, regularity of the proceeding, and, in the case of public servants, notice of the character in which they act, etc.

"But the homicides which in their circumstances fall within the operation of this proviso, are those only in which the public servant or other person killed has not gone beyond the law in doing that which has caused provocation. It will happen usually in such cases, that before the blow or other act which causes death, there have been acts of violence on both sides.—force used and repelled by force, the blood already heated kindling afresh at every blow, until in the tumult of passion the voice of reason is not heard. Suppose the public servant or other person acting in obedience to the law is met with violence, and in opposition to such violence and in self-defence strikes a blow, and then is killed by his antagonist. The blow struck under such circumstances should be regarded as struck not vindictively or by way of punishment, or for the purpose of offence, but in self-defence only, and to diminish the violence which is unlawfully brought into operation against him. It cannot therefore be any such provocation as will mitigate murder.

"But if the public servant or other person uses force or violence unnecessary, and not justified by law, this provision will not operate to prevent due weight being given to such acts, by the Court in considering the question of fact,—that is to say in considering whether the provocation was not grave enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. Thus, if a police officer make an arrest not in a manner authorized by law, but violently by knocking down the person to be arrested, provocation so given would not come within this proviso.

"It will be remembered that acts 'not strictly justifiable by law' (if they do not cause the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt), done in good faith, and under colour of office by or by direction of a public servant, are protected to this extent and there is no right of private defence against them. (See section 99). But such acts seem not to fall within the terms of this proviso concerning provocation.

"Nothing is expressed in the proviso to limit its operation to cases in which a person has notice or knowledge of the character of his opponent i. e. that he is a public servant or that he is a person acting under the authority of a public servant or under some lawful power or authority. When the provocation is given by a private person acting in obedience to law, it may be that a knowledge of the law must be presumed and that notice of his authority is not requisite. But when the provocation proceeds from a thing done by, or by direction of, a public servant, it seems to hold that (in other analogous cases, see sections 99, 183, etc.) some knowledge, or reason for belief, that the person resisted fills a particular character or office, is essential"—Morgan and Macpherson; Vide, illustrations (c) and (d).

Thirdly.—"The chapter of General Exceptions defines, with such precision as the subject admits of, the limits of the right of private defence and in what cases it extends to causing death. (See sections 90-106). The right being thus given by law, the case is withdrawn from operation of the present exception. When the acts which are supposed to provoke, are acts of resistance which the law allows, it cannot also allow such resistance to be regarded as a provocation sufficient to mitigate or excuse the commission of homicide. Suppose a police officer in the lawful exercise of his power arrests A who not knowing and not having reason to know his intention, resists the arrest but without needless violence. This resistance is as yet lawful in respect of its falling within the limits of A's right of self-defence. (See section 99). But suppose further that the officer repels the force used against him by greater force, and is thereupon killed by A. (See section 100). Here A's conduct may be wholly justifiable; or if he has exceeded the limits of self-defence and has committed culpable homicide his offence may admit of mitigation by reason of provocation given. (See the next Exception). But if the officer, excited by the provocation received from A, had killed him, he would be entitled to no benefit from this first Exception."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Explanation.—"It is not sufficient extenuation that the act is done under the influence of passion or some other feeling which takes away the power of self-control. The passion, etc., must have an adequate cause.

"The Code does not attempt to enumerate or define what causes shall be admitted to be adequate causes. It declares only that the excitement or want of self-control must proceed from grave and sudden provocation; and it then leaves it to the Court to decide as a question of fact, whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. The general principle being ascertained to be the loss of self-control arising from great human infirmity,—which is so general, and almost universal as to render it proper to make allowance for it in admeasuring punishment,—the subject is left to be dealt with in each particular case as a matter of fact unfettered by arbitrary distinctions. But notwithstanding that it is declared to be a question of fact, it is not to be supposed that in a matter so important the mere private opinion of each judicial officer is the true rule of judgment. Certain general rules for the guidance of his discretion must be recognized, although, subject to them, each case is to be disposed on a due consideration of its special circumstances.

"Bearing in mind that the exception is founded upon a principle of indulgence shewn by the law to human frailty but not to human ferocity,—it may be safely laid down that the provocation which is allowed to extenuate, must be something which a man is conscious of, and which he feels keenly, and resents, at the instant the act which he would extenuate is committed. A permanent subjection to a wicked and cruel disposition does not mitigate or excuse an offence. So, if the act can be traced to a previous brutal malignity, and not merely to the influence of passion arising from provocation, however grave and sudden the provocation, it will not extenuate.

"Sometimes the act itself must point to a previous determination to murder. Suppose B is poisoned by A. It is proved that A had previously brought the poison and prepared the cup, but that at or immediately before the time of administering it, he received from B in a quarrel, grave and sudden provocation in the shape of severe blows. The blows are not to be allowed to cloak what he does, if it is evident (as it probably would be) that what he does is not done in consequence of the blows, but in consequence of his previous design to cause death. His mind may be agitated at the time; but this is not enough, if the act is not done in consequence of such agitation. Thought, contrivance and design, shewn by preparations made before any provocation, tend to shew that his subsequent act proceeds from his pre-determination, and that it is the result of judgment and reason. The fatal act cannot in such a case be supposed to be owing to want of self-control caused by the excitement.

"As to what acts amount to a provocation grave as well as sudden,—this is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence, and no restrictive or exclusive rule can be admitted. It would seem that the particular temperament of the person provoked, whether this be known or unknown to the provoker, is not wholly to be disregarded. But even if we assume that no allowance can be made for this, and that the provocation must be of that nature and degree which commonly produces in men of ordinary tempers an irritation of mind which renders them incapable of calculating the consequences of their acts, there are some provocations which cannot but be allowed by common consent to be grave enough to mitigate homicide, on the other hand there are many trivial, and some considerable, provocations which will not probably be deemed sufficient to extenuate an act of homicide upon a view of the whole of the facts of the case in which they occur.

"If a person strikes another with a deadly weapon, or assaults him with blows causing great bodily pain or blood-shed—or if he in a serious personal conflict assails him, having a great superiority of personal strength or skill,—the provocation would seem sufficiently grave to extenuate. So a blow given to a man's wife or child may well be deemed to have the same provocative power as one given to himself. The discovery of the wife of the accused in the act of adultery with the person killed, is generally admitted to be an adequate cause of provocation.

"And any like grievous outrage, although wounding only the honour and the affections may be thought cause sufficient. On this subject, after referring to the case of the paramour caught in the act of adultery, the Indian Law Commissioners say—"we must own that we can see no reason for making a distinction between this provocation and many other provocations of the same kind. We cannot consent to lay it down as an universal rule that in all cases this provocation shall be considered as an adequate provocation, circumstances may easily be conceived which would satisfy a Court that a husband had in such a case acted from no feeling of wounded honour or affection, but from mere brutality of nature, or from disappointed cupidity. On the other hand, we conceive that there are many cases in which as much indulgence is due to the excited feelings of a father, or a brother, as to those of a husband. Thus a worthless, unfaithful, and tyrannical husband should be guilty only of man slaughter for killing the paramour of his wife, and that an affectionate and high spirited brother should be guilty of murder for killing in a paroxysm of rage the seducer of his sister, appears to us inconsistent and unreasonable.

"There is another class of provocations which some jurists do not allow to be adequate in law, but which have been, and, while human nature remains unaltered, will be adequate in fact to produce the most tremendous effects. Suppose a person to take indecent liberties with a modest female in the presence of her father, her brother, her husband, or her lover. Such an assault might have no tendency to cause bodily pain, or danger; yet history tells us what effects have followed from such assaults. It is difficult to conceive any class of cases in which the intemperance of anger ought to be treated with great lenity. So far, indeed, should we be from ranking a man who causes death under such provocation with murderers, that we conceive that a Judge would exercise a sound discretion in sentencing such a man to the lowest punishment fixed by the law for man-slaughter.

"It seems that an assault which is in itself slight and does not cause great bodily pain, but which is accompanied by words of menace, threats or other circumstances indicating an intention to inflict such pain, would be deemed provocation sufficient. On the other hand, a mere trespass or injury to lands or goods, a breach of a man's word or promise, words of reproach (including the word of denial), mere words of menace of bodily harm, rant, expressions of contempt, indecent and provoking actions or gestures,—these supposing them to be unaccompanied by any act showing a present intention to commit a grievous personal injury, have not ordinarily been regarded as sufficient provocation to extenuate the depriving a man of his life. And it must be admitted that violent acts of resentment which bear no proportions to the provocation or insult received, proceed rather from mental malignity than human frailty, and ought not to be extenuated.

"But, in as much as the principle of extenuation is founded on the want of self-control actually occasioned by the provocation, whatever it may be, it must not be forgotten that gross insults by words, gesture or even caricature, may have as petent a tendency as bodily injuries to move some persons on a sudden violent passion. Moreover the intensity of the provocation may depend less on words or blows than on the state of feelings or health of the person provoked. Severe bodily pain may render a person so susceptible of passion that a small matter may excite him violently.

"When the plea of provocation caused by insulting words, signs or gestures is offered in mitigation of homicide, the administrators of the law may properly reject it in one case, and as properly admit it in another, according to the character and condition of the person who offers it. The framers of the Code lay down no rule that insults by words or gestures shall necessarily be considered an adequate cause of provocation, while for the reasons assigned by them they think it proper to recognize and allow the provocative force of such insults. The great mass of the people are accustomed to the use of insulting words and the display of contemptuous gestures. It is notorious that among them this is the most common mode of offering insult. Foul language and indecent gestures, in consequence, lose much of their offensiveness to them. On the other hand there are doubtless very many persons so sensitive in their feelings that such insults, or even an indignity offered by reflection upon their integrity, an imputation upon their courage, etc., might excite in them sudden and uncontrollable gusts of passion.

"Cases may occur of homicide committed in some manner or by some instrument not likely to cause death and upon provocation of a slighter kind than can be considered grave. In such cases, it is first to be considered and ascertained whether the homicide is a culpable homicide,—or, in other words, whether the act was done with that intention to cause death, or knowledge that death was a probable result, which is a necessary part of the offence of culpable homicide. If it was not, no question can arise under this or any of the subsequent Exceptions." Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases—A provocation, though insufficient to bring a charge of murder within the exception, to s. 300, may yet be sufficient for the reduction of the sentence. A statement of an accused pleading guilty, if probable and consistent, should be given weight to and acted on in preference to the prosecution evidence. 16 Cr. L. J. 611=30 Ind. Cas. 435. Culpable homicide though committed under provocation, will amount to murder, unless it is proved not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it, all control over his actions, but that the feeling had an adequate cause. 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 11=10 W. L. Cr. 26. A, the deceased, came out of his room in a challenging manner to meet M and was fighting with him. S, the father of M interfered. A gave a severe stab on left side of S's chest and also wounded M. M gave A a blow with his knife which tucked into his waist cloth and caused A's death. Held, that M was under provocation which was grave enough to deprive him of his self-control, and that he was guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 9 M. L. T. 489=12 Cr. L. J. 235=10 Ind. Cas. 262. The appellant a Brahmin and the deceased a chamar, were prisoners in the jail and employed in digging up radishes in the garden. The appellant pulled up a radish and began eating it, and the deceased abused him for doing so, calling him bohini chod or bete chod, whereupon the appellant struck him four blows with the spade which was in his hand and caused his death. Held, that, although the language used by the deceased, a chamar, to the appellant, a Brahmin, was of a very abusive and offensive character, it would not amount to grave and sudden provocation meant in exception 1 of s. 300 I. Getting incensed at this, A inflicted on B a fatal blow. Held, that as the deceased hit the appellant with the sole object of preventing him from stabbing C, in exercise of the right of private defence as laid down in s. 97, Penal Code, this provocation will not bring the appellant's act under the first exception to s. 300, Penal Code. 12 Cr. L. J. 477=12 Ind. Cas 85. As regards what does not amount to sudden and grave provocation. Vide. 108 P. L. R. 1902. Where an accused, finding his wife inside his house lying on a cot with a man with whom she had previously had an intrigue, murdered the wife. Held, that the provocation caused by the wife and the man being found laying together on the cot in view of the previous intrigue was sufficiently grave and sudden to disturb the equanimity of the accused, so that the case fell within the exception contained in this section. 16 Cr. L. J. 625=30 Ind. Cas. 449; see also 3 P. R. 1913 Cr.=11 Ind. Cas. 208=14 Cr. L. J. 208=209 P. L. R. 1913. Where on a quarrel between the accused and the deceased, the latter who was stronger than the other came towards the accused with his shoes in a menacing attitude and the accused thereupon picked up an axe and struck some blows upon the deceased, one of them penetrating to the heart and causing instant death, held, that the accused was guilty of murder. 29 P. R. 1889 Cr. Grave and sudden provocation is not a necessary consequence of anger or other motive that the power of self-control should be lost. Except where unsoundness of mind or real fear of instant death is proved, the pressure of temptation is no excuse for breaking the law. 20 B. 215. Deliberate intention negatives grave and sudden provocation. 8 A. 635=A. W. N. 1886, 252; see also 8 A. 622=A. W. N. 1886, 250; 1 L. B. R. 46.

Where the accused found a man entering his house at night at the invitation of his wife, with whom that man had criminal intimacy and being enraged, caught hold of him and took him outside the house to some distance and there assaulted him so severely, that he, subsequently, died of injuries received, held, that the circumstances under which the deceased was found in the house of the accused on the night of the crime was sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to the accused and his relations, and that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feeling of the accused for a considerable period after the deceased was caught in the house in the company of the wife of the accused. 28 C. 571=5 C. W. N. 708. Where the accused who had been ill for three or four months and who attributed his illness to witch-craft practised upon him by his brother caused the latter's death, held, that the provocations arising out of the belief that he was bewitched by his brother, even if it were a real provocation, was not so sudden as to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide, not amounting to murder. 1 Weir 305. Where the accused, who had been injured by the deceased in many ways extending over many years, killed the deceased, held, that the provocation was not so grave and sudden as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1 Weir, 305. The prisoner's concubine had left her for another connection which she refused to abandon notwithstanding remonstrances. When she left at the termination of their last interview, he went after her and killed her with a dagger, which he had purchased with the intention of killing her. Held, that although her conduct may have been a grave source of provocation it was not a provocation of a sudden character or such as the law could take into account in determining the legal aspect of the offence which was murder. 1 Weir 306. The refusal of wife to let the husband have connection with her does not amount to grave and sudden provocation, so as to reduce the offence of killing the wife to culpable homicide, not amounting to murder. 1 Weir, 308. Where there is no deprivation of self-control grave and sudden provocation is not sufficient to bring a case under exception 1 to s. 300 Penal Code. 33 P. R. 1884 Cr. On the occasion of the marriage ceremonies of a man the deceased came and took away the bride and when he remonstrated was soundly abused. He took a pen knife and inflicted a wound which however resulted in death. Held, exception 1 to s. 300 I. P. Code applied. 73 Ind. Cas. 695=24 Cr. L. J. 663. Where the accused sister-in-law was raped by the deceased and the accused on hearing of it lost self-control and attacked the deceased his case comes within exception 1. 139 Ind. Cas. 772=26 S. L. R. 266=1932 Cr. C. 741=33 Cr. L. J. 870=A. I. R. 1930 Ind. 168. The accused was asked by the deceased to go out to the fields with him. The accused interpreting this to be an offer for illicit intercourse, used his dagger on the deceased with fatal results. Held that the accused had not received grave and sudden provocation and as such his case was not covered by exception 1. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 59.

Accused had enticed away the sister of the deceased. The deceased and the accused with the brother who were armed with a spear met at first before the house of the deceased near a mosque where abuse was exchanged and demand was made by the deceased to the accused to return his sister. At the persuasion of a relation the accused retreated being followed by the deceased and between the two Mohallas where each lived at a spot at a considerable distance from the houses of each the accused struck a blow with the spear at the deceased who in no time succumbed to the fatal wound. Held, the accused did cause the death of the deceased intentionally and he is not entitled to the benefits of any exception to section 300, I. P. Code. 1923 Lah. 195; see also A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 103=1934 Cr. C. 197=35 Cr. L. J. 1378. Where the crime was not a premeditated one and it was quite clear that the accused must have acted on sudden impulse as death took place by strangulation effected by twisting deceased's hair round her throat. Held some sudden provocation must have arisen to impel the accused to do this deed. 1923 Lah. 691. The accused who was already aware that his wife had an intrigue with the deceased, followed them on one occasion, and, having found them in each other's arms, killed the deceased. Held, that the case was not covered by exception 1 to Section 300 I. P. Code. 7 P. R. 1890 Cr. Where a wound resulting in death was inflicted in which cruel and unusual means were used and where there was grave, but not sudden provocation, held that the accused was guilty of the offence of murder. 1 Weir 303; see also 40 L.W. 777=1934 M.W.N.1358=1934 Cr.L.J. 1938=A.I.R.1934 Mad. 722=67 M.L.J. 674. A man who, by a single blow with a deadly weapon, kills another man who, at the dead of night, entered his room for the purpose of having criminal intercourse with his wife, is guilty only of causing grievous hurt on a grave and sudden provocation. 3 W. R. Cr. 55. Where an accused person, without necessity went out on the road armed with a knife, uttering a challenge to fight, and on the fight beginning, used his knife so as to cause the death of his opponent, held, he had committed murder. L. B. R. (1893-1903), 459. The mere fact that a man, who, having found another sleeping with his wife, killed him on the spot, called aloud at the time for the assistance, did not necessarily indicate that he had acted under grave and sudden provocation. A. W. N. 1881, 112. The accused's wife carrying on intrigue with another and in spite of the advice of a panchayat refused to mend her ways. On the day of the offence, the husband advised her to give up her bad ways, to which she asked him to go his own way, whereupon he killed her. Held, there was a grave and sudden provocation within the meaning of the section. 9 O. & A. L. R. 556. Where a person finds his wife in flagrante delicto with another man he is deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation and if he kills wife acting under that impulse he comes within exceptions, 300. 71 Ind. Cas. 992=24 Cr. L. J. 273.

The accused wife was in the habit of going away from her husband's house though she was not illtreated there. One day the accused heard that his wife was again running away and followed her to a grave. He happened to carry a chopper at the time but not with the intention of killing his wife, he having been working in his field with the chopper. He tried to persuade his wife to accompany him back home but she refused and gave him foul abuse whereupon the accused struck her with the chopper and caused her death. Held, having regard to the unfortunate habit of the woman of running away from home, the foul abuse given by her to her husband who tried to take her back home, and having regard to the circumstances of an Indian household where the wife is expected to obey and respect her husband, there was grave and sudden provocation. 74 Ind. Cas. 712=24 Cr. L. J. 808.

The rule contained in section 300, exception (1) does not contemplate that in order to entitle an accused to earn the mitigation provided for the act must immediately follow the provocation. 12 Lah. L. J. 406. Before a person can claim the benefit of s. 300 exception (1) I. P. Code, he must prove (i) that he was deprived of the power of self-control, and (ii) that the provocation was so grave and sudden as to reasonably justify such loss of self-control. In other words it ought to be distinctly shown not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his action but that feeling had an adequate cause. In the absence of such proof, the atrocity of the offence will not be mitigated and the offender will not be able to escape the legal consequence of the act. A person who flies into passion without just cause and goes about slaughtering people may be insane but if he is sane he cannot defend his action on the ground of provocation. 63 Ind. Cas. 610=22 Cr. L. J. 674.

The accused, discovering his daughter-in-law in his house with a Mahomedan fakir, got in to a rage, seized an axe and haked the girl to death. Held, that the provocation received by the accused was sufficient to remove his act from the category of murder. 61 Ind. Cas. 165=22 Cr. L. J. 341=3 U. P. L. R. (A.) 41.

Where the accused killed his wife who had long been known to him to be a woman of loose character and who had again and again desired access to him the act cannot be said to have been done under grave and sudden provocation. 65 Ind. Cas. 522=Cr. L. J. 140=4 U. P. L. R. Lah. 49. Provocation which is neither grave nor sudden enough to deprive even an ordinary hot-tempered person of self-control cannot operate to create an exception 1 to s. 300 Indian Penal Code, if the offender can show that, though not insane he has a temperament that is outside the normal course of human development. It is a question of fact as to whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. 76 Ind. Cas. 105=25 Cr. L. J. 105. The burden of proving that an accused who committed an offence acted under the influence of grave and sudden provocation which deprived him of power of self-control is upon him. 6 Lah. L. J. 323=1924 Lah. 654; 81 Ind. Cas. 717=25 Cr. L. J. 1005; 26 P. L. R. 304. A husband actually saw his wife having sexual intercourse with another and killed her then and there with an axe. Held, the fact brought him within exception 1 to s. 300 and even if the plea was not taken by the accused, it was the duty of the Court to give him the benefit of it and convict him only under s. 304 I. P. Code. 25 Cr. L. J. 1077=81 Ind. Cas. 901=1925 Nag. 37. To attract the operation of s. 300, exception 1 there must exist such an amount of provocation as would be excited by the circumstances in the mind of a reasonable man and so as to lead the jury to ascribe the act to the influence of that passion. The provocation must be such as will upset not merely a hasty and hot-tempered person, but one of ordinary sense and calmness. 5 Lah. 67=81 Ind. Cas. 826=25 Cr. L. J. 1050. Where the accused saw his wife actually committing adultery there cannot be the least doubt that grave and sudden provocation must have been caused. The rule contained in s. 300 exception (1) does not contemplate that in order to entitle an accused to earn the mitigation provided for, the act must immediately follow the provocation. 23 Cr. L. J. 563=68 Ind. Cas. 403. The accused saw the deceased in his house at midnight taking liberties with his sister whereupon he beat him to death. Held, that the accused had grave and sudden provocation and that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 5 Lah. L. J. 40=1924 Lah. 92. It appeared from the evidence of some of the witnesses for the prosecution that the accused got enraged when the deceased abused him, but considering that after attacking the victim with a fork the offender fetched a Shhari in order to strike the deceased again it is not possible to hold that the provocation that he received can be regarded as sudden within the meaning of the first exception to section 300 Indian Penal Code nor that the abuse uttered by the deceased can be received as a grave provocation in order to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide. 1923 Lah. 408.

Where the deceased remonstrated with the accused's father for diverting the course of the old water channel which led to a quarrel and then the accused came to support his father and assaulted the deceased. Held, there was no grave and sudden provocation within the meaning of Exception I. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 742. Finding wife and her paramour at dead of night together is grave and sudden provocation. 26 P. L. R. 260=85 Ind. Cas. 374=6 L. L. J. 437=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 114. A wife who had been leading a grossly immoral life, was after one such act upbraided for her misconduct by her husband. She replied she would continue to do the same and when the husband chastised her, she struggled with him and bit his finger, whereupon he took a knife and stabbed her to death. Held the case fell within Exception 1 to s. 300 I. P. Code. 88 Ind. Cas. 844=26 Cr. L. J. 1928=A. I. R. 1925 All. 676; see also 83 Ind. Cas. 482=26 Cr. L. J. 3; 29 Cr. L. J. 347=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 544; 30 Cr. L. J. 1044=119 Ind. Cas. 323 A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 1711. If a person lost temper and struck another on the head with a lathi his action is not distinguishable from illustration (c) to the first Exception to s. 300 and he is prima facie guilty of murder. 90 Ind. Cas. 159=26 Cr. L. J. 1503. Deceased was having an intrigue with wife of accused for a long time and used to sing provocative songs tantamount to declaration, his intrigue. Held, that the relations between the accused, the deceased and the accused's wife were such as to constitute a continuing grave provocation; the song mentioned in evidence was of a nature to give sudden and grave provocation every time it was sung by the deceased in the presence of the accused; the mere fact that he had managed to control himself on previous occasions when provoked, was no reason for refusing to give the benefit of Exception (1). A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 78. The provocation contemplated by

s. 300, Exception 1, must be such as will upset not merely a hot-tempered or hypersensitive person, but one of ordinary sense and calmness. 96 Ind. Cas. 209=27 Cr. L. J. 897=A. I. R. 1926 Lah 598. Abuse of the accused by the deceased cannot be said to be grave and sudden provocation so as to reduce the offence of murder to culpable homicide. 27 P. L. R. 15. If a man comes home and finds a person actually misbehaving with his relation, his blood can hardly be expected to have cooled in the course of 15 or 20 seconds, and it is grave and sudden within the Exception 1 to s. 300. 27 Cr. L. J. 65=91 Ind. Cas. 241=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 272. The deceased ran out of his house calling out the accused and provoking a fight and the accused in return defied the accused and told him to come on. The deceased then caught hold of the accused by the tuft and gave him two blows with the fist. There was a struggle and the deceased held accused firm by the tuft. The accused then gave the deceased a blow on the left side with a baker which he had in his hand and this caused his death. Held, on these facts that there was grave and sudden provocation and that the offence was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1927 M. W. N. 796. Whether provocation is grave and sudden such as to deprive the accused of the power of self-control is a question of fact to be determined upon the peculiar circumstances of each case. In determining that question the Court must take into account the condition of the mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation. 29 Cr. L. J. 459=108 Ind. Cas. 902. Where a brawl is taking place in which the assailants on both sides are using sticks, a member of one side who intervenes with a hatchet and strikes over the head of a member of the other side who is empty-handed and taking no active part in the fight and kills him in consequence, he is guilty of murder and Exception 4 of section 300 has no application to such a case. 5 O. W. N. 29=107 Ind. Cas. 177=29 Cr. L. J. 230=A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 221. Where the accused snatched a lathi from the hands of a person standing near and struck a blow over the head of the deceased and after felling him continued to belabour him and it appeared that though there was sudden fight between the two people the deceased had caused no injuries worth the name and that the accused had dealt violent blows so as to cause death in a brutal manner. Held, that the accused was guilty of murder and that Explanation IV to s. 300 I. P. Code did not apply to the case. A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 282=5 O. W. N. 391. Abuse by deceased who is person of law caste to her husband does not constitute grave provocation though it may be sudden. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 344. Improper overtures by step-mother to her step-son do not amount to grave and sudden provocation. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 415.

Exception (2).—The right of private defence may arise when a person sees a man approaching him with a stick trailing in his hand, for he might expect the man to hit him with the stick. But when such a person claiming the right has another companion by his side who is himself properly armed, he should at least call on the person approaching him with the stick to drop down his stick before resorting to such a dangerous mode of exercising the right as firing a shot at such person. 35 Ind. Cas. 511. When there is a free fight between two persons no right of private defence accrues to either of them. 151 Ind. Cas. 469=35 Cr. L. J. 1319=1934 Cr. C. 559=A. I. R. 1934 Lah 332. Where a case falls under this exception the conviction should be under s. 304 and not under s. 302. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 144=1933 Cr. C. 267=34 P. L. R. 886=145 Ind. Cas. 921. Plea of self-defence can be raised in appeal. 142 Ind. Cas. 901=33 P. L. R. 718=1932 Cr. C. 820=34 Cr. L. J. 462=A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 606.

"This exception applies where death is caused by an act which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence, but which is not a lawful act, because it exceeds the limits assigned by law to that right.

"The law in certain cases allows a man to cause the death of another man in self-defence. In these cases no offence is committed, and there can of course arise no question as to the culpability of the homicide. In other cases, the law limits the right of private defence to the causing of any harm other than death. It is with reference to such cases that this exception must be considered, for it applies only to homicides caused by an excessive and unjustifiable exercise of this limited right of private defence. The tendency of this provision is to favour persons who have been led in an energetic exercise of the right of defence to step beyond the prescribed line.

"This Exception is clearly connected with the law of private defence and must necessarily partake of the imperfections of that law. The Indian Law Commissioners observe: "wherever the limits of the right of private defence may be placed, and with whatever degree of accuracy they may be marked, we are inclined to think that it will always be expedient to make a separation between murder and culpable homicide in self-defence.

"The chief reason for making this separation is that the law itself invites men to to the very verge of the crime which we have designated as culpable homicide in defence. It prohibits such homicide indeed. But it authorizes acts which lie very near to such homicide. And this circumstance we think greatly mitigates the guilt of such homicide. That a man who deliberately kills another in order to prevent that other from pulling his nose should be allowed to go absolutely unpunished would be most dangerous. The law punishes and ought to punish such killing. But we cannot think that the law ought to punish such killing as murder. For the law itself has encouraged the slayer to inflict on the assailant any harm short of death which may be necessary for the purpose of repelling the outrage, to give the assailant a cut with a knife across the fingers which may render his right-hand useless to him for life, or to hurl him down stairs with such force as to break his leg. And it seems difficult to conceive that circumstances which would be a full justification of any violence short of homicide should not be a mitigation of the guilt of homicide. That a man should be merely exercising a right by fracturing the skull and knocking out the eye of an assailant, and should be guilty of the highest crime in the Code if he kills the same assailant, that there should be only a single step between perfect innocence and murder, between perfect impunity and liability to capital punishment, seems unreasonable. In a case in which the law itself empowers an individual to inflict any harm short of death, it ought hardly, we think to visit him with the highest punishment if he inflicts death.

"It is to be considered also that the line between those aggressions which it is lawful to repel by killing, and those which it is not lawful so to repel, is in our Code, and must be in every Code, to a great extent an arbitrary line, and that many individual cases will fall on one side of that line which, if we had framed the law with a view to those cases alone, we should place on the other. Thus we allow man to kill, if he has no other means of preventing an incendiary from burning a house; and we do not allow him to kill for the purpose of preventing the commission of a simple theft. But a house may be a wretched heap of mats and thatch, propped by a few bamboos, and not worth altogether twenty rupees. A simple theft may deprive a man of a pocket book which contains bills to a great amount, the savings of a long and labourious life, the sole dependence of a large family. That in these cases the man who kills the incendiary should be pronounced guiltless of any offence and that the man who kills the thief should be sentenced to the gallows, or if he is treated with the utmost lenity which the Courts can show, to perpetual transportation or imprisonment, would be generally condemned as a shocking injustice. We are therefore clearly of opinion that the offence which we have designated as culpable homicide in defence, ought to be distinguished from murder in such a manner that the Courts may have it in their power to inflict a slight or a merely nominal punishment or acts which though not within the letter of the law which authorizes killing, in self-defence, are yet within the reason of that law."

"There must be a fit occasion for the exercise of the right before any question can arise under this Exception. Suppose a man having no pretence for so acting, enters the house of another against his will and refuses to quit, whereupon the owner, using no force or violence beyond what the occasion calls for, proceeds to eject him. If the intruder resists and so causes the death of the owner of the house, the homicide is not extenuated by this Exception, for the intruder's acts were not done in the exercise of any right or lawful power but were wholly illegal, on the other hand, if under similar circumstances the owner of the house used unnecessary violence to the trespasser and thereby caused his death, this Exception would be applicable.

"The following cases will further illustrate the exception. A, finding B plucking stakes from his hedge or trampling on his crops, deliberately fires a gun at him, or uses a deadly weapon to punish him. This degree of violence is not justifiable (see section 103.) And B, notwithstanding his wrongful act, may protect himself and his life against it. The right of defence under such circumstances arises to him, and he may repel force by force. And should he cause A's death, the homicide will be mitigated under the present Exception.

"Suppose a parent, master, guardian, etc, chastises with great severity, in a cruel and unusual manner, his servant, pupil, etc, and the latter resents the act and causes death. He may claim the benefit of the Exception. For a power lawful within certain limits may, if exercised oppressively be resisted by the sufferer; and if, in defence of himself against oppression, he causes death under circumstances which because of the excess of force, are not justifiable, his offence may still be entitled to mitigation.

"This Exception, like the preceding one is not to be made a cloak for premeditated crime. If A strikes B, intending and foreseeing that B will resent it in such a mode as to justify A in resorting to self-defence under cover of which he designs to take B's life, this exception does not apply. Nor does it where great violence is resorted to and death is thereby caused upon a trivial occasion.

"It is enacted by one of the General Exceptions (section 79) that nothing is an offence which is done by a person who by reason of a mistake of fact believes himself justified by law in what he does. There may, it seems, be cases of homicide in the exercise of the right of private defence to which the General Exception rather than the particular Exception now under consideration is applicable. A person who in good faith exceeds the strict limits of the right of self-defence, under a mistake of fact as to the degree of force which is opposed to him and what is requisite to repel such force, is probably excused under the 79th section." Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—Where the accused, who was concealing himself from the Police, was seized by the deceased and two others, and in order to rescue himself he struck the deceased two severe blows on head and shoulder, with an axe, which he had in his hand at the time, in consequence of which blows the deceased expired in a week. Held, that the accused exceeded his right of private defence in that he caused more harm than was necessary to resist the unauthorised attempt of the deceased to place him in confinement. 12 Cr. L. J. 81=9 Ind. Cas. 452. The accused can have no benefit under this section, where he fired at a person mistaking him for a thief as regards certain fruits. 13 Cr. L. J. 782=17 Ind. Cas. 414. Where the deceased and some of the prosecution witnesses had trespassed by night into the house of the accused and were dragging him outside the house, the accused was entitled to defend himself against them. But where the accused while so being dragged, stabbed the deceased, and the first accused inflicted a mortal wound on the former and caused grievous hurt to the latter, when his assailants were unarmed and when there was nothing to suggest that he had any reason to believe that he was in danger of death or grievous hurt at their hands. Held, that the accused exceeded his right of private defence, but was within the second exception of this section, and that he was not guilty of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 8 M. L. T. 462=8 Ind. Cas. 1088=12 Cr. L. J. 18. The case of causing the death of a thief suddenly discovered and pursued, was held to amount to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. U. B. R. (1897—1901), Vol. I. 291.

Accused, a servant employed to watch the crops of a field, went round one night and saw a man cutting crop at midnight. The thief on seeing the accused tried to run but accused, who was armed with a lathi at once struck him a blow on the head felling him to the ground; the victim of the blow eventually died. Held, that under Exception 2 to section 300, Penal Code, the accused exceeded the right of private defence of property. 64 Ind. Cas. 133=22 Cr. L. J. 741. If a person in defending himself exceeds the right of private defence and intends to cause death of his assailant he must not be held to be guilty of murder. A person in order to defend himself, may kill his adversary provided he has a reasonable apprehension that otherwise he himself would be killed. But if he exceeds the right of self-defence where there is no reasonable apprehension of his being killed but only had reasonable apprehension of grievous hurt and in defending himself exceeds his right of private defence and kills the other, he is guilty of an offence less than murder. 26 Cr. L. J. 1142=88 Ind. Cas. 405=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1069; see also 26 Cr. L. J. 1320=89 Ind. Cas. 264=L. R. 6 A. 113 Cr.=A. I. R. 1925 All. 753; 14 P. L. T. 464=1933 Cr. C. 1079=A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 508.

Exception (3)—Shooting under an illegal order of superior officer, is no excuse. 21 M. 249; 83 Ind. Cas. 702 (2).

"This exception extenuates certain acts of public servants in excess of their lawful powers. Death caused by such acts,—done in good faith and without ill-will, for the advancement of public justice,—is excused because it would be unjust to hold that those persons upon whom the law imposes certain duties which they are bound to discharge, are to be punished as murderers because they may have undesignedly or incautiously overstepped the limits of their authority." Morgan and Macpherson.

Public servant acting for the advancement of justice.—"The explanation of the words 'public servant' (see section 21) makes the expression to include a large class of persons, of whom those only are here included who act 'for the advancement of justice.' Without attempting to enumerate who may come within these terms it seems clear that officers of police, both civil and military—ministerial officers of Courts of Justice, jailors etc., acting in the execution of their respective duties are within its meaning. On the other hand, person invested with rights to collect and distribute the revenue of the state, customs officers, revenue and survey officers, the Municipal Commissioners in the Presidency Towns and their servants etc., are not while executing their principal and appropriate duties, included.

"This exception will be applicable to cases in which peace officers cause death in keeping the peace or in executing criminal process. In these and all other cases to which the exception applies, the public servant will be regarded as acting in advancement of justice, not only while actually engaged in his duty of keeping the peace, suppressing an affray, serving process, etc., but also while going to and returning from the place to which his duty calls him. Therefore if he comes to do his duty, and meeting with opposition on the way, uses a degree of violence to overcome it, beyond that which the law permits, and thereby causes death,—his offence will not amount to murder if he acts in good faith according to his view of what is lawful and necessary"—Morgan and Macpherson.

"Exceeds the powers given to him by law, etc."—No case arises for the operation of this exception, when the conduct of the public servant is wholly illegal and unauthorized. For although the law is not extreme to mark with severity what has been honestly done by a public servant in the discharge of his duties, yet if he takes on himself to act for the advancement of justice without any colour of authority, or grossly in excess of his lawful powers, he forfeits the protection of the exception. It must be ascertained carefully in each case what are the powers and privileges which the public servant possesses, and what is the nature of his conduct in the matter wherein he has exceeded those powers. The following sections of the Code should also be consulted. Sections 52, 76-79 and 99.

"A has a warrant for the arrest of B, who runs away to avoid the arrest. He is pursued by A, who trips him up or strikes him to prevent his escape, and kills him. If in respect of this excess, A should be deemed to have committed culpable homicide, this exception will extenuate his offence so far as to prevent it amounting to murder. But suppose a defect or irregularity in the process or a mistake in good faith by which B is taken for C the person really named in the warrant. In such a case, the offence of A is, it is conceived, not the less within the present exception. For although his lawful authority, so far as it derived from the warrant, fails him, yet he has the protection of certain provisions (see sections 76 and 78) which give to his act sufficient legal effect or validity to prevent this excess from being punished as if he had committed murder or from being punished otherwise than under the present section."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Without ill-will towards the person whose death is caused.—This expression seems intended, like others in former exceptions, to guard against the application of the exception to cases in which it might be sought to use it to cloak such acts of violence as make an offender really a murderer."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Those who give their aid to public servants acting for the advance of public justice, are entitled to the benefit of this exception.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Exception (4).—Where the deceased and the accused simultaneously made preparations and fought immediately, case comes under exception 4. 144 Ind. Cas. 420 = 1933 Cr. C. 732 = 34 Cr. L. J. 783 = A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 142 ; see also A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 851 ; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 434. In order to get benefit of this exception the accused must not have taken undue advantage or acted in cruel or unusual manner. 142 Ind. Cas. 901 = 34 Cr. L. J. 462 = 33 P. L. R. 718 = 1932 Cr. C. 820 = A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 606 ; see also A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 280 = 32 Cr. L. J. 1254 = 1931 Cr. C. 536 = 134 Ind. Cas. 829 ; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 438 = 10 O. W. N. 986 = 1933 Cr. C. 1323 ; 14 P. L. A prisoner who taking advantage of an incident which occurred in what till then had been a fair fight, struck his opponent, and knocked him over should not have been found guilty of murder. W. R. 1864 ; Cr. 36 ; L. B. R. (1872—1892) 271 ; 13 Cr. L. J. 272 ; 40 A. 686. Where the accused pleads that the deceased met with his death as the result of a sudden fight in which there was no premeditation and that the fight arose out of a sudden quarrel, but, it is clear that the accused took undue advantage of the deceased in as much as the deceased was lying on his charpoy and was not armed and in a position to defend himself, exception 4 does not apply. 101 Ind. Cas. 191=28 Cr. L. J. 415. If two men are fighting and one of them is unarmed, while the other uses a deadly weapon, the one who uses such a weapon must be held to take an undue advantage and not entitled to the benefit of Exception 4 to s. 300 Penal Code. 2 L. B. R. B. 320=1 Cr. L. J. 1128. The number of wounds is not the criterion, but the position of the combatants with regard to their arms and the use of those arms are the considerations to be kept in mind when applying Exception 4 to s. 300. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 59.

Sudden quarrel and sudden fight.—The stress which is laid upon this is to be remarked. The degree or kind of provocation does not so much enter into consideration here as the suddenness of the dispute and of the fight which follows. The lapse of time between the quarrel and the fight is therefore a very important consideration.

"It may be material also to enquire what were the previous relations between the disputants. If the persons are strangers to each other, until the time of quarrel and have no previous cause of contention, the fight will probably be 'in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel' within this Exception. Still more so, if they have lived previously upon terms of intimacy or friendship, and no cause of contention has arisen. But where there has been an old quarrel between A and B, the Court should narrowly examine the circumstances of this seemingly new and sudden falling out, to ascertain that it is not really the continuance of the old feud. If there has since been a true reconciliation the old enmity should not be considered. But if the circumstances show that the reconciliation was pretended or counterfeit, the quarrel cannot be held 'sudden' within this exception.

"The following illustration shows the operations of the exception. A and B, having no previous enmity against one another meet and, some cause of dispute arising quarrel and fight upon the spot. If death ensues in fair fight, this homicide does not amount to murder, and it matters not who gave the first blow or provocation. But if they quarrel overnight and agree to fight next day, or quarrel in the morning and agree to fight in the afternoon, however sudden the quarrel, the fight is not sudden but a deliberate act previously appointed and arranged and the homicide will be murder.

"Upon this ground the causing of death in a deliberate duel cannot fall within this mitigating exception. In duels there is usually deliberate fighting in cold blood, and after a certain lapse of time from the injury done or the cause of quarrel. Such a duel cannot be called a sudden fight without premeditation. Even if the fighting follows immediately upon the quarrel, or so quickly after it that the heat of passion has not subsided, a duel and other contest with deadly weapons, although fought suddenly and without premeditation, would perhaps not be deemed within his exception."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Without the offender's having taken undue advantage etc.—"The fight must be a fair fight as well as a sudden one. And it cannot be so unless the parties stand upon some footing of equality as regards arms, bodily strength, and preparedness for the combat. Suppose a sudden quarrel between a powerful man, with arms in his possession, and a decrepit person or a defenceless woman. The man using his arms against such opponents would be guilty of murder if he caused their death.

"It must not, however, be supposed that the exception applies only to cases in which each party to the combat is equally matched in point of muscular strength, skill, and arms, etc. For where there is no manifestly gross inequality, minute differences in bodily strength or in other particulars should not be deemed sufficient to remove the case from the operation of this Exception."—Morgan and Macpherson.

"Undue advantage."—May consist in this that at the outset there is some conduct which puts the combatants upon an unequal footing. A attacks B suddenly and when B's back is turned : or he draws his sword and rushes upon B without giving him time or opportunity to prepare. In such cases, the combat does not begin upon an equal footing, and undue advantage is taken; and this, more particularly in the last case, where the attack is made with a dangerous weapon. Suppose the contest to be with fists, and one of the combatants has concealed in his possession an open knife and causes death by wounds from this knife. He gains an undue advantage and also acts in a cruel manner. If the combatants begin the fight fairly, but one of them being worsted seizes some deadly weapon which is at hand and uses it and causes death, it seems such conduct excludes him from the benefit of this exception. In such a case, however, it may be that the excitement of passion or fear under which he labours may be deemed to mitigate his offence.

"Suppose two persons fight, and one overpowers the other and knocks him down, and then strangles him with a rope. This is a deliberate act, no part of the fight, but a cruel and unusual proceeding, which cannot be extenuated.

"All struggles in anger, whether by fighting with or without weapons, by wrestling, or by any other mode, may be offences. But they are offences of very different degrees. In many cases homicide thus caused is so culpable, as to deserve a very severe punishment; but in other cases, a slight or merely nominal punishment may suffice. It will be found that the Courts have it in their power to punish culpable homicide not amounting to murder, with sentences ranging from transportation for life to the infliction of only a small fine." Morgan and Macpherson. Where the accused takes undue advantage in the course of a quarrel; the case does not fall within the exception 4 of s. 300, I. P. Code, although the fatal wound is inflicted without premeditation, in a sudden fight, in the heat of passion and upon a sudden quarrel, and the accused would in such a case would rightly be convicted of murder. U. B. R. (1872-1892), 271. If two men fight with their hands, or with weapons of a similar kind, and one of them uses also a weapon of a distinctly advantageous kind, such as a pistol, a dagger, or a heavy club, he takes an undue advantage over his opponent and is not protected by the fourth Exception of s. 300. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 288.

Explanation to Exception (4)—"This explanation directs the attention to the distinction between the present and some of the preceding Exceptions. In many cases of mutual contest, homicide caused by the person who received the first blow or the provocation, would, under those Exceptions, have been extenuated; but if that person's death had been caused by his opponent, the offence would not have been within reach of any mitigating provisions. The present Exception is meant to apply to cases in which, notwithstanding that a blow may have been struck or some provocation given in the origin of the dispute,—or in whatsoever way the quarrel may have originated,—yet the subsequent conduct of both parties puts them in respect of guilt upon an equal footing. For there is a mutual combat, and blows on each side; and however slight the first blow or provocation, every fresh blow becomes a fresh provocation. The blood already heated warms at every subsequent stroke, and the voice of reason is heard on neither side in the heat of passion. Under such circumstances there cannot be much room for discriminating between the respective degrees of blame with reference to the state of things at the commencement of the fray.

"In such cases, words or gestures of reproach, of contempt, etc., or some act of provocation of no serious kind, lead to blows and then mutual combat which is sudden and without preconceived intention. The resentment generally is of such a kind as to bear some proportion in the degree of it, and in the weapons which are used, to the provocation. A sudden quarrel excites the anger of the persons engaged in it. In the heat of passion blows are interchanged (being given and taken), and in this sudden and unpremeditated fight, death is caused."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—When the accused's party pursued the complainants in three boats for a long distance and then when they had them in their power, landed and attacked them with spears and killed three of them their action does not come within exception 4 to section 300, and certainly amounts to murder. 8 C. L. J. 561=9 Cr. L. J. 32. If on a sudden quarrel blows pass without any intention to kill or seriously injury one another, and if one of those fighting, while in hot blood in the course of the struggle kills the other with a deadly weapon, this is not murder, but culpable homicide. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 371. Where the accused received a kick from the woman with whom he used to have criminal intercourse on his declining to continue it, and he therefore, struck a blow on her heart and throttled her till she ceased breathing, held, that the accused was guilty of murder, as there was no grave and sudden provocation and as the case did not come within Exception 4. 4 P. R. 1872 Cr. Exception 4 to section 300, cannot apply where the accused used a knife where there was no appreciable risk of even serious hurt to his person. 31 Ind. Cas. 347=16 Cr. L. J. 747. When the fatal attack was not a premeditated one and the victims were injured in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and the offenders did neither take undue advantage nor acted in a cruel or unusual manner the requirements of Exception 4 to section 302 are not satisfied. A person who deals a violent blow on the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knows was likely to cause death. 26 P. L. R. 363. Where it appeared that the accused had no motive for the deliberate murder he was charged with and bore no grudge him, that there was a sudden and unpremeditated fight between the accused and the deceased whereby the accused himself got several injuries. Held, that the accused was entitled to the benefit of exception 4 to s. 300. 7 Lah. L. J. 533=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 633. Exception 4 is meant to apply to cases wherein, in whatever way the quarrel originated, the subsequent conduct of both the parties put them upon an equal footing. 8 Lah. L. J. 93=27 P. L. R. 132=93 Ind. Cas. 251=27 Cr. L. J. 459=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 219; A. I. R. 1935 All. 438. Where in a sudden and unpremeditated fight under grave and sudden provocation injuries by a knife are caused resulting in death of the injured who was the aggressor, the offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder and not murder. A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 518. Where the accused was shown to have struck only one blow on the head and one blow on the leg and thereby caused death, held, that the blow with the lathi did not amount to acting "in a cruel or unusual manner" and the appellant is entitled to the benefit of the fourth exception to s. 300 I. P. Code. 30 P. L. R. 487=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 719. Where the murder was the result of a sudden quarrel and there was some provocation. Held, that a sentence of transportation for life should be substituted for the sentence of death. 1929 M. W. N. 789; see also A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 154.

Exception (5)—This exception extends to all cases of death occasioned by or resulting from premeditated acts, where the party killed takes the risk of death with his own consent. 7 C. L. R. 158. This exception applies to cases where a man commit the doing of some particular act either knowing that it will certainly cause death or that death will likely be the result; but it does not refer to the running of a risk of death from some thing which a man intends to avert, if he possibly can do so, even by causing the death of the person from whom the danger is to be anticipated. 5 C. 31=4 C. L. R. 285; 45 P. R. Cr. 1917; 6 W. R. Cr. 57. "The case supposed in the illustration to this section, viz. the abetment of suicide committed by a person under eighteen years of age, is one of the offences expressly made punishable by section 305. "The following case illustrates this Exception. Z a Hindoo widow, consents to be burned with the corpse of her husband. A kindles the pile. Here if Z is above the age of eighteen years. A has committed culpable homicide, not amounting to murder.

"We have seen that a person above the age of eighteen may lawfully consent to suffer any harm short of death or grievous hurt (section 87). According to this present Exception, if such a person consents to his own death, the homicide, though culpable is mitigated. The Indian Law Commissioners in support of distinction drawn between murder and culpable homicide by consent, observe: 'It appears to us that this description of homicide ought to be punished, but that it ought not to be punished so severely as murder. Our reasons for not punishing it so severely as murder are these. In the first place the motives which prompt men to the commission of this offence are generally far more respectable than those which prompt men to the commission of murder. Sometimes it is the effect of a strong sense of religious duty, sometimes a strong sense of honour, not frequently of humanity. The soldier who, at the entreaty of a wounded comrade, puts that comrade out of pain, the friend who supplies a laudanum to a person suffering the torment of a lingering disease, the freed man who, in ancient times, held out the sword that his master might fall on it, the high born native of India who stabs the females of his family at their own entreaty in order to save them from the licentiousness of a band of marauders, would, except in Christian Societies scarcely be thought culpable and even in Christian Societies, would not be regarded by the public, and ought not to be treated by the law as assassins. Again, this crime is by no means productive of so much evil to the community as murder. One evil ingredient of the utmost importance is altogether wanting to the offence of culpable homicide by consent. It does not produce general insecurity. It does not spread terror through society. When we punish murder with such signal severity we have two ends in view. One end is that people may not be murdered. Another end is that people may not live in constant dread of being murdered. This second end is perhaps the more important of the two. For if assassins were left unpunished the number of persons assassinated would probably bear a small proportion of the whole population. But the life of every human being would be passed in constant anxiety and alarm. This property of the offence of murder is not found in the offence of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. Every man who has not given his consent to be put to death is perfectly certain that this latter offence cannot at present be committed on him, and that it never will be committed, unless he shall first be convinced that it is his interest to consent to it. The law in these two places has been framed on the principle of regarding the causing of harm as warranted by the sufferer's intelligent consent, and the causing of death as mitigated by the like consent or choice, if the sufferer is a person of ripe age, and the age of eighteen years has been fixed on, as what might reasonably be considered to be a ripe age. The consent must be a free and intelligent consent (see section 90). But such consent cannot, for the purpose of bringing a case within this Exception, be given by any person who is not above eighteen years of age. Indeed the mere fact of a person even above that age consenting to be killed, would, except under very unusual circumstances, indicate a morbid state of mind, sufficient to raise a doubt of his sanity.

"Suppose the consent of the person whose death is caused, is obtained by deception or concealment, the person practising such deception, cannot avail himself of the consent obtained by such means.

"A person labouring under some disease may consent 'to take the risk of death' by undergoing a certain treatment of the disease which he knows to be attended by considerable danger to his life. If he consents to such treatment at the hands of one who professes to have the requisite skill and knowledge, but who is in reality grossly ignorant, and who, by his incompetency, causes the death of the sufferer, such consent will not bring the case under this Exception.

"And the Exception will perhaps apply to others, as coachmen, pilots, boatmen, engine-drivers, etc, under certain circumstances. Thus a boat man over-crowding his boat, a pilot rashly navigating a vessel, etc, and thereby causing death, will come within the exception,—if the person whose death was caused by his own will entered the crowded boat, or consented to the pilot's proceeding to sea with the ship in a dangerous state of wind, tide or weather. In these and similar cases of misconduct and want of skill, consent to the probable risk is not to be implied, unless there is proof of the knowledge of the incapacity or want of skill. The mere employment of such a person is not a consent to suffer whatever his gross ignorance may inflict.

"Cases of Suttee must be considered with reference to the terms of his Exception. The burning of a Hindu widow by her own consent with corpse of her husband is by existing laws, which were enacted upon the most careful and solemn deliberation, an offence.....Under this Code, those who directly cause the death, are guilty of this mitigated kind of culpable homicide, if the widow being above eighteen years of age, chooses or consents to die ; and those who instigate or aid in the commission of this offence, are in like manner guilty as abettors. But if the widow is under that age, all those concerned in the offence are guilty of murder whether the victim is a young child, or is of more mature age and intelligence, the consent of such a person, however freely given, does not mitigate the offence if the person is not eighteen years old.

"Killing in a duel, according to the circumstances of the particular case, may be culpable homicide amounting to murder, or may be only a mitigated kind of culpable homicide. The Code makes no special provision respecting the way in which fatal duels are to be dealt with. Offences committed in that way are left to be punished under the general law. It will be for the judicial administrators of the law to apply it to the facts of such cases as shall be brought before them, having regard to the classification of cases which the law has adopted, and not to such a consideration as whether a particular case is or is not one of that description of cases called duels, a class unknown to the law."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—When a person claims the benefit of Exception 5, he must show that the person whose death he caused consented to have the act, which caused death, done upon him knowing that it would cause his death or knowing that his life would be endangered thereby. But it is not sufficient merely to satisfy the Court that the person whose life he took voluntarily took the risk of death. 5. L. B. R.

160=11 Cr. L. J. 345=5 Ind. Cas. 988. An appellant was found to have killed his step-father, who was an infirm old man and an invalid, and who consented to being killed, the appellant's motive being to see three innocent men hanged. Held, that the 5th Exception to s. 300 applied to the case and that he could not be convicted under s. 302, but only under s. 304 Part I. Penal Code. 45 P. R. 1917 Cr. The accused strangled his beloved aged 16 years to death upon their decision to die together in despair of the future separation and feeling that they would not live apart. Held, that this was essentially the case where the spirit, if not the letter, of Exception 5, may be applied and, though convicted of murder, sentence should be transportation for life. 117 Ind. Cas. 890=30 Cr. L. J. 855.=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 50. The mere fact that it is impossible to say which of the accused actually inflicted the fatal wound is no reason at all for refraining from passing the death sentence, where the Court is satisfied that there was at a common intention to murder, brutally carried out, and that all took part in the beating the result of which was death. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 337; see also A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 110.

301. If a person, by doing anything which he intends or knows to be likely to cause death, commits culpable homicide, by causing the death of any person, whose death he neither intends, nor knows himself to be likely to cause the culpable homicide committed by the offender is of the description of which it would have been, if he had caused the death of the person whose death he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause.

Principle.—The definition of culpable homicide makes the offence to consist in death caused by an act done with a certain intention or knowledge. If homicide is the result it is sufficient, for it is not a part of the definition that the death caused should be the death of the person whose life is aimed at. Whether the offender has succeeded or been thwarted as to the particular victim, he has occasioned a loss of human life, and the state is as much interested in punishing his offence as if he had caused the death of the person he meant to kill. Where a blow aimed at one person lights upon another and kills him, this is a loose way of speaking, may be called accidental with regard to the person who is killed by a blow not intended for him;—but according to law, if it appears that the injury intended to A be it by poison, blow, or any other means of death would have amounted to murder, supposing him to have been killed by it, it will amount to the same offence if B happens to fall by the same means. On the other hand, if the blow intended against A and lighting on B arose from a sudden transport of passion which in case A had died by it, would have reduced the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder, the fact will admit of the same alleviation if B should happen to fall by it. The culpable homicide actually committed “is of the description of which it would have been” if the blow had caused A’s death. So where two persons meet to fight a deliberate duel, and a stranger comes to part them and is killed accidentally, so to say, by one of them, this will be a homicide of the same description as if the person killing had caused the death of this adversary in the duel.”—Morgan and Macpherson; see also 1912 M. W. N. 136=13 Ind. Cas. 833; 1912 M. W. N. 193; 36 A. 161; 21 Bom. L. R. 1101.

Case.—Where a person commits the offence of house breaking into a dwelling house at night and in order to evade arrest strikes out wildly with a dangerous weapon, utterly regardless of whether his blows will or will not cause death or injury to any one of the inmates, and causes the death of a person, held, that he committed the offence of culpable homicide as defined in section 299 for, even if it is assumed that he did not intend to cause death or to cause such injury as was likely to cause death, he knew or must be taken to have known that by his act he was likely to cause death. 12 P. R. 1911 Cr.

Mussammat Jeoli had been carrying on an intrigue with a Lodh who gave her some poison to administer to her husband. She prepared halwa mixed with poison which was eaten by one Madania, who died as a result thereof. The husband and three others also partook of the halwa and suffered considerably but did not die. She, however, intended to murder her husband and not Madania. Held that the accused was guilty of murder, notwithstanding that there was no intention actually to murder Madania. 36 Ind. Cas. 473=15 A. L. J. 13=17 Cr. L. J. 505. Accused sent some sweetmeats containing arsenic to A with the intention of causing her death. B and C also shared the sweetmeats with A and although all three of them become ill one of them died : Held, the accused was guilty of an attempt to murder not only A but also B and C. The mere fact that amount of arsenic was not sufficient to cause the death of A made no difference. 3 Lah. L. J. 191=22 Cr. L. J. 194=60 Ind. Cas. 50. Where there is much to be said for the view that the Sessions Judge on his own finding should have held that the offence committed was one of murder and not a culpable homicide, and it is far from certain that the reasons given by him for holding otherwise are in accordance with the law as laid down in ss. 303 and 301 I. P. Code, but the Crown does not apply for enhancement of sentence, it cannot be said that the case is one which must inevitably fall under section 302 and in which there has been a miscarriage of justice in bringing the offence under s. 304. A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 315=28 Cr. L. J. 788=104 Ind. Cas. 228. A person striking another with a highly lethal weapon like a sharp dao, and inflicting such dangerous injuries as the medical report shows there to have been must be considered to have known that such injuries were likely to cause death. So where a prisoner had probably no intention of striking his child, his killing the child by a blow intended for the mother, would be culpable homicide amounting to murder and punishable under s. 301 Penal Code. 8 W. R. Cr. 78.

302. Whoever commits murder shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, and shall also be liable to fine.
Punishment for murder.

Transportation for life.—This punishment should be awarded in cases of tender age. 11 C. W. N. 904.

Punishment principle of awarding.—The framers of the Code have made it discretionary with Judges, to consider mitigating circumstances in awarding punishment. 12 Cr. L. J. 448. The Code does not, by its definition, distinguish between different degrees of murder. But the Courts in awarding the punishment of this offence, may discriminate between a wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, as where the murder is committed by poison or by lying in wait, etc., and murder which is committed with less deliberation or premeditation.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Commits murder.—A man who strikes another with a knife in the throat must know that the blow is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and the injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 8 Pat. 911. Where the husband killed his wife's lover while the latter was asleep and it appeared that he had himself placed his wife in a position of temptation by absenting himself for several months. Held, that the murder being premeditated and deliberate, capital sentence should be inflicted. 109 Ind. Cas. 113=29 Cr. L. J. 465=A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 241. Where a person is attacked and killed, it must be decided whether the assailant is guilty of culpable homicide and, if so, whether the culpable homicide amounts to murder or not. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 868. Where a blow aimed by a person at his wife did not strike the wife but struck another and killed that other. Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 302 I. P. Code. 107 Ind. Cas. 764=29 Cr. L. J. 280=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 344. The mere fact that more prompt or better treatment would have saved the deceased cannot exonerate the accused from liability for the murder of the accused. 108 Ind. Cas. 164=29 Cr. L. J. 345=10 A. I. Cr. R. 39. If one person causes the death of another, then if his intention was to cause death or to cause bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence would be murder, even though death resulted in a way different from that expected by the assailant. 5 Rang. 817=109 Ind. Cas. 215=29 Cr. L. J. 487=A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 64. If a man stabs another over the heart deliberately with a knife capable of penetrating into the heart, the offence would be murder. 138 Ind. The mere fact that the body of the murdered person has not been found is not a ground for refusing to convict an accused person of murder. 152 Ind. Cas. 376=A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 139. For conviction under s. 302, there must be good and sufficient evidence to support it. That the Sessions Judge is morally convinced of guilt is not sufficient. A. I. R. 1935 Pat. 19. Where severe blow on head with deadly weapon causes extensive fracture of skull, the accused is guilty of murder even if victim dies only a month after attack. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 94. In any case where the body has disappeared it must necessarily be very difficult to prove first of all that the supposedly murdered person has actually died and secondly he died a violent death at the hands of the accused. This is specially so where the disappearance has taken place in circumstances where it is not humanly impossible for him to survive. In such a case the probabilities being very wide the evidence will not be sufficient to convict the accused. 9 Pat. L. T. 449=111 Ind. Cas. 721=29 Cr. L. J. 913=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 473.

Two girls were quarrelling about a small quantity of gram. During the quarrel the elder girl gave a blow to the younger with a thin lathi. The uncle of the younger girl, who then came to the place, gave a blow with a lathi on the head of the elder girl and the elder girl at once fell down. After she fell down, he gave two more blows on her thigh. The girl died. Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 304, para 2, and not under s. 302. 9 Pat. L. A tracker followed the tracks with directions from villagers to the Ahata of S and G. Shoes of R were recovered at the instance of B. The tracker found tracks of B and S, leading to the place where the body was later found buried. Dead body of R was found at the instance of the confession made by S. Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish charge under s. 302 but was ample to establish an offence under s. 201, Penal Code. 112 Ind. Where it appeared that the deceased who was trusted and treated with hospitality by the accused, seduced his wife and persisted in remaining in the accused's house, after he had been requested to leave, and the accused killed the deceased. Held, that the murder was committed on provocation and consequently the proper sentence to be passed was not death but transportation for life. 106 Ind. Where in a murder case the Court finds that it is not a case where the accused can be said to have only intended to cause hurt or to have acted with reckless violence and that the accused persisted in striking blow after blow and had also selected vital parts, held, that the accused must in the interests of justice be sentenced to maximum sentence known to the law, namely, death. 105 Ind. It has invariably been held in all the Courts in India that in the murder of her newly born illegitimate child by a woman there are mitigating circumstances sufficient to redeem the appropriate penalty very much below a sentence of transportation. Most of such circumstances apply, though in a lesser degree to the case of the father of such a child. 75 Ind. Cas. 767=25 Cr. L. J. 63=1924 Nag. 119. Where the Court held the offence of murder was committed but sentenced the accused to transportation solely on the ground that their confessions alone made the convictions possible, the reason was not sufficient for not awarding the extreme penalty of law. 25 Cr. L. J. 116=76 Ind. Cas. 180=1924 Lah. 624. Mere absence of premeditation or deliberate intention to kill is no reason for not passing the sentence of death. Nor is the fact that only one blow was struck a-ground. So also the fact that the accused is a woman is not a conclusive reason for not passing the sentence of death. 2 Bur. L. J. 277. When a Judge does not pass the normal sentence viz., the sentence of death in a case of murder, he is bound to record his reasons and he must find there are really extenuating circumstances and not merely absence of aggravating circumstances. 1 Bur. L. J. 96=1922 L. B. 32. Youth alone in every case is not such an extenuating circumstances as would justify the imposition of lesser penalty in case of murder, but it should be taken into consideration with the other facts of the case. Where no extenuation is shown and the offence is deliberately committed mere youth alone would not entitle the accused to the lesser penalty. 1 Bur. L. J. 70; 11 Bur. L. T. 100=9 L. B. R. 165=45 Ind. Cas. 840=19 Cr. L. J. 648. Generally the age or sex of a murderer cannot of itself be sufficient ground for a lenient sentence. If there are other reasons which very nearly justify the passing of the lesser sentence but do not quite do so, or when it is doubtful whether they do so or not, then the youth or the sex of the criminal may certainly dip the scale to the side of mercy. 18 N. L. R. 101=64 Ind. Cas. 277 (N)=1922 Nag. 65. The mere absence of premeditation is not in itself in every case of murder a sufficient ground for imposing the lesser penalty. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life there should be really extenuating circumstances, and not merely absence of aggravating circumstances. The fact that the crime was committed without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel is not an extenuating circumstance. 18 Cr. L. J. 113=37 Ind. Cas. 465. When a Session Judge finds the accused guilty of a cruel murder under s. 302 there being no extenuating circumstances, he should not refrain from passing a sentence of death, because there was no eye witness to the murder. In a case of murder the facts clearly established were that the accused was last seen with the child alleged to have been murdered, and that he stripped her of most of her ornaments and sold them and that her body was next found in a well, and the accused disclaimed all knowledge of the matter, though he himself indicated the well. Held, that the accused was guilty of a foul murder, which in spite of his youth called for the extreme penalty. 16 Cr. L. J. 167=27 Ind. Cas. 551.

When the deceased was returning from the bazar to his house, two of the four accused struck him with a lathi causing him to fall to the ground, and then the other two accused struck him with their lathis, held that, in as much as it was doubtful whether the deceased was dead when they began to strike him, and as they did not commence the attack, the two latter would be adequately punished by the sentence of transportation for life and the former two deserved the sentence of death. 2 A. 33. Murder should be punished with death or transportation for life. There is no other alternative. 5 N. W. P. 130. In case of murder by two persons, the one taking minor part and acting under influence of the other, should be punished with lesser sentence. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 305. There may be extenuating circumstances which may have to be laid before a jury for deciding whether the crime is culpable homicide or murder. But where the conviction is for murder, the sentence should be one of death, and any extenuating circumstances justifying a lenient view of the case can only be represented to the crown with a recommendation for mercy. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 852. In the awarding of capital sentences, the Chief Court does not make any distinction between cases of murder as proved by direct or indirect evidence. 12 P. R. 1888 Cr; see also 13 P. R. 1869 Cr; see also A. I. R. 1930 Sind. p. 225. The fact that the accused was not arrested when actually committing the crime, or in the act of escaping from the spot, is no reason for not passing the sentence of death. 13 P. R. 1873 Cr. In addition to a sentence of death, the Sessions Judge sentenced the accused to a fine, and directed that, if the fine is realised it should be paid to the deceased's heir. Held that this subsidiary order was not sustainable. 18 P. R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr. L. J. 522=20 Ind. Cas. 1002=41 P. W. R. 1913 Cr. Wife-murder is so common an offence in Sind that it is necessary that deterrent sentences should be passed in all such cases, even where the provocation is that the wife was found in adultery. 5 S. L. R. 256=15 Ind. Cas. 807=13 Cr. L. J. 535. Where the three accused murdered their cousin who had supplanted one of them in an intrigue with woman, held, that having regard to the state of society at the place where the act was committed, the sentence of death should be commuted. 2 P. R. 1867 Cr. Where there was no sudden provocation, but where the act of murder was not premeditated, the sentence of death should be commuted. 107 P. R. 1866 Cr. A custom among the Baluchis of killing for unchastity cannot be taken into consideration in mitigation of sentence. 28 S. L. R. 279. The fact that the accused committed the murder prompted by jealousy is no ground for reducing the sentence.

A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 222=35 Cr. L. J. 894=11 O. W. N. 636=149 Ind. Cas. 69=1934 Cr. C. 273.

The intoxication of the accused, while he was committing murder may be properly taken into consideration on the question whether the act was premeditated or done only from a sudden impulse. But voluntary drunkenness cannot be pleaded as an excuse for a crime. 41 P. R. 1866 Cr.; see also L. B. R. (1893-1900) 550. Voluntary drunkenness can be considered by Court in an awarding lesser penalty for murder. 12 Rang. 445=A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 361=1934 Cr. C. 1326; see also A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 10=35 Cr. L. J. 1065=149 Ind. Cas. 1176. Judges should not shrink from doing their duty, however painful it may be, of passing capital sentences in cases where they are convinced, beyond reasonable doubt, that a deliberate murder has been so committed as to necessitate the award of capital sentence. 3 L. B. R. 163. On a conviction for murder, a sentence of death should ordinarily be passed unless there are extenuating circumstances. In considering whether there are extenuating circumstances, not only the circumstances of the particular case, but the conditions of the country and the habits of the people may fitly be taken into account. 1 L. B. R. 216. Where a quiet, peaceable man, suddenly and without the least motive or provocation, runs a-mock against all around him, his case is different from an ordinary case of deliberate murder deserving of the extreme penalty. 8 W. R. Cr. 53. The common object of an assembly was to commit a dacoity, and there was a general purpose to resist all opposers even, if necessary, to the point of death. This assembly, did actually commit dacoity, and when retreating on the advent of villagers in superior force, one of its members shot and killed one of the villagers. Held, that, as the murder has been committed in effecting a safe retreat and as the retreat was not separated by time or space from the offence which formed the common object of the assembly, it was a continuation of the dacoity, and the murder must be taken to have been committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. 2 Bom. L. R. 325. If murder is committed in committing dacoity every one of the persons concerned in the dacoity is liable to be punished with death. 6 Bom. L. R. 248=1 Cr. L. J. 258; U. B. R. 1900 Cr. If an act, by which death is caused, does not in itself constitute the crime of murder, it does not constitute murder because it is coupled with dacoity. 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 108. Where an accused person was found to have murdered his wife under a mistaken impression that she was unchaste to him, the High Court set aside the sentence of death passed on him, and sentenced him to transportation for life. 8 C. W. N. 218=1 Cr. L. J. 62. In case of brutal and premeditated assassination sentence of death is proper. 138 Ind. Cas. 27=11 Pat. 280=33 Cr. L. J. 574=13 P. L. T. 530=A. I. R. 1932 Pat. 209; A. I. Sentence must be determined upon gravity of offence irrespective of discovery or non-discovery of dead body. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 25.

Accused striking deceased with a hatchet with knowledge of what he was doing and the dangerous nature of his act, is guilty under s. 302. But where attack by him is result of foul language used by deceased, death sentence should not be imposed, transportation for life is sufficient. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 545. Improper overtures by step-mother to her stepson do not amount to grave and sudden provocation. Maximum sentence however should not be levied. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 415. The fact that accused sets up false defence that he never knew deceased even when evidence shows that deceased was last seen alive in his company and his disappearance immediately after murder is sufficient to bring home offence to him. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 265. Lesser sentence than death should be awarded in case of murder of wife who continues intimacy with paramour in spite of repeated reprimands. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 171. Where murder by juvenile is not wholly deliberate and cold-blooded, and there is certain amount of legitimate provocation capital sentence may not be appropriate. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 972. The High Court has power to enhance sentence. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 446. Unless extenuating circumstances can be found murder must be sentenced to death. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 252. Reason for passing lesser sentence ought to be express and adequate. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 247; see also A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 168.

Evidence of murder.—The fact of murder admitted of no doubt. The main evidence for the prosecution and the sole evidence connecting the accused with the murder was that of two brothers whose evidence was uncorroborated in material particulars and unreliable. The villagers were well aware of the identity of the murderers, but whether it was because the real murderers were public favourites or the deceased was unpopular no evidence was forthcoming. A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 527=1929 Cr. 287. Even in the absence of medical evidence a conclusion that a person was poisoned could be a good conclusion. When the other evidence read with the medical evidence points to such a conclusion it is unnecessary to consider the question of motive. 6 O. W. N. 681=119 Ind. Cas. 870=30 Cr. L. J. 1118=A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 516. Where the accused were proved to have removed the corpse partly with the intention of shielding themselves and partly with the intention of screening the offenders and there was no definite evidence to the effect that they were present at or had taken part in the murder, held, that they could only be convicted under s. 201 I. P. Code. 6 O. W. N. 1017. Where that accused were seen in number and the assessors were of opinion that some of them were not guilty while others were held to be guilty although the evidence against them was nearly the same and it appeared that the evidence was most unsatisfactory and the truth had been kept back. Held, that under those circumstances it was not proper to convict some of the accused under s. 302 I. P. Code. 30 P. L. R. 536.

It is not incumbent upon the prosecution to produce all the persons who happened to have gathered at the scene of murder on hearing the out cries. The production of two or three of the respectable and leading members of the place would be sufficient. But the mere fact that there were some litigation between the witnesses and the accused does not reduce the credibility of the witnesses. Enmity is a double-edged weapon and what would be a reason for the murder might well be a reason for fabrication of a false case. 10 Lah. L. J. 229=112 Ind. Cas. 215=29 Cr. L. J. 999. Where the accused was proved to have had knowledge of the murder and he also produced certain ornaments belonging to the deceased and a confession of guilt made by the accused to the lambardar on his being guaranteed immunity was also relied on. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction under s. 201 and not under s. 302 I. P. Code. 111 Ind. Cas. 449=29 Cr. L. J. 865=29 P. L. R. 486. The trial of an accused person does not necessarily end, if he pleads guilty but may and should be taken in cases of murder as if the plea had been one of not guilty and case decided upon the whole of the evidence including the accused's plea. It is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty in a case when the natural sequence would be a sentence of death. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 775. In the absence of any motive an accused cannot be convicted merely on his own uncorroborated confession, which he retracted at the first opportunity alleging that the confession was put into his mouth by the Police who tortured him in order to induce him to turn an approver. 104 Ind. Cas. 247=28 Cr. L. J. 807=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 682. The fact that the accused was one of the two persons with whom the deceased was last seen alive, and the fact that he pointed out the spot where the dead body was ultimately found, are not sufficient to draw the inference that the accused was none of the actual murderers. No doubt grave suspicion attaches to him in this connection, but grave suspicion is not sufficient. 103 Ind. Cas. 97=28 Cr. L. J. 641=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 541. In a case of murder by person, mere motive of accused to cause death of deceased will not dispense with proof. 144 Ind. Cas. 357=1933 Cr. C. 664=34 Cr. L. J. 754=A. I. R. 1934 All. 394. Death must be proved to be due to arsenic poisoning administered by accused. Evidence of post mortem doctor that from appearance of stomach and intestines he was of opinion that death was due to arsenic poison is insufficient. A. I. R. 1933 All. 837; see also 142 Ind. Cas. 714=16 N. L. J. 35=1933 Cr. C. 1261=34 Cr. L. J. 398. A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 303. Withholding available evidence by prosecution, though likely to be treated as flaw in evidence, still each case depends upon its facts. 137 Ind. Cas. 691=33 Cr. L. J. 497=33 P. L. R. 580=1932 Cr. C. 664=A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 500.

Where the accused was charged of murder and convicted on evidence consisting mainly of statements made by witnesses suggesting that his demeanour was some, what too calm when attention was drawn to the fact that his hut of grass, the scene of the occurrence was burning. Held, in appeal that the trial Judge had attached disproportionate weight to the circumstantial evidence and that the conviction must be set aside as the offence had not been adequately proved. 28 P. L. R. 27=99 Ind. Cas. 324=8 Lah. L. J. 559=28 Cr. L. J. 116=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 51. It is unsafe to convict a man for murder merely because a bloody axe is found in his house, when the evidence is that other people have access to the house. 91 Ind. Cas. 1002=27 Cr. L. J. 186=9 N. L. J. 80=A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 229. The fundamental rule by which the effect of circumstantial evidence is to be estimated is well established. In order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. 96 Ind. Cas. 849=27 Cr. L. J. 993. When a Court is not convinced that a man is dead it is impossible to convict any one of his murder. Where, however, the Court is convinced that the man was dead, death sentence may be upheld even if the body has not been found. To sustain a conviction for murder the Court must first be satisfied that the murder had been committed and then that the accused had committed it. 93 Ind. Cas. 252=27 Cr. L. J. 460=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 234. Where a charge is for murder or theft or both it is not legitimate to presume the accused guilty of the more serious offence of murder, merely because the accused is unable or unwilling to explain the possession of stolen property. 93 Ind. Cas. 42=27 Cr. L. J. 394=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 638. If one is satisfied that murder was committed the appropriate punishment should follow. The discovery of the body is not a material circumstance. It is murder which is the thing to be regarded, that is to say, the killing of a human being by one or more human beings without just cause or excuse. The absence of the body is a circumstance which makes it necessary to proceed with the greatest care and caution, and one must never confirm a sentence of death, unless one feels completely satisfied about it. If there is such an element of doubt as to render a Judge in the least degree uneasy, the proper course is not to change the nature of sentence from death to transportation of life, but to acquit the man altogether. 23 A. L. J. 821=89 Ind. Cas. 903=26 Cr. L. J. 1431=A. I. R. 1925 All. 627 (F. B.). Where the Civil Surgeon and the Sub-Assistant Surgeon were unable to say what poison was actually administered and there was no evidence on the record to show that poison had been administered. Held, the evidence on the record was quite insufficient to establish the charge. 85 Ind. Cas. 817=26 Cr. L. J. 593=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 325. The mere fact that an accused person appears to have known where the corpse was buried does not prove that he was the murderer. 89 Ind. Cas. 901=26 Cr. L. J. 1429. Casual witness deposing that accused informed his intention of murder should not be believed. 122 Ind. Cas. 587=31 Cr. L. J. 438=1931 Cr. C. 457=A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 169. Weak evidence does not justify transportation for life but acquittal. 142 Ind. Cas. 841=13 P. L. T. 702=11 Pat. 807=1933 Cr. C. 253=34 Cr. L. J. 427=A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 100; see also A. I. Retracted confession alone of accused is not sufficient to justify conviction of co-accused. A. I. R. 1932 Oudh. 321=33 Cr. L. J. 502=9 O. W. N. 327=137 Ind. Cas. 665. To justify conviction on approver's evidence it is sufficient if corroboration is merely circumstantial evidence of accused's connection with crime. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 621=33 Cr. L. J. 916.

In a case of murder it is unsafe to rely upon the evidence of witnesses, who have resiled from their previous statement. If a Judge wants to rely upon s. 288 Cr. Pro. Code, the whole of the statement should be filed and not merely certain portions. The Court must be able to come to a conclusion after writing the evidence. 22 L. W. 405=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 879. Where a person pleads guilty to a charge of murder, but adds he did it out of jealousy, a conviction should take place only after hearing all the evidence, as some ground may be seen for applying s. 304 I. P. Code. 23 A. L. J. 587=89 Ind. Cas. 260=26 Cr. L. J. 1316=A. I. R. 1925 All. 647. Where the medical evidence showed that the body of the deceased bore two wounds of a penetrating nature, one of which completely perforated the heart, and the other penetrating the abdomen on the left side had divided the intestines. Held, it must be deemed that the intention of the accused was, if not to cause death, at least to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. 7 Lah. L. J. 582=26 P. L. R. 829. A conviction based on purely circumstantial evidence must be treated with the greatest caution and subjected to the closest scrutiny. The existence of a motive, an opportunity and the exclusion of any alternative motive could not be sufficient to support a conviction without at least some other evidence. In such cases a sentence which is irrevocable should not be passed. 76 Ind. Cas. 97=25 Cr. L. J. 97. The mere fact that the appellant left his house with a weapon in his hand after the deceased had left it on the night of the murder is not a very material point in connecting him with the murder. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 539. Where the prosecution theory in a murder case was presumably built on the opinion first expressed by an expert witness (civil surgeon) when the accused had no proper opportunity to cross-examine but who subsequently modified his opinion, the benefit of doubt was given to the accused. A. I. R. 1923

Lah. 189. Where the body though decomposed was identified by the help of clothes, height and age of the deceased and the accused made confessions before witnesses and Tahsildar before whom she was produced for remand and who though had not recorded the confession under s. 164 Cr. P. Code. deposed to it, held, that the appellant was guilty of the offence under s. 302, that there was no reason to doubt the testimony of the disinterested witnesses and the unanimous verdict of the assessors. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 40.

Even if it be held satisfactorily proved that accused did give information which led to the recovery of the dead body, that fact alone would not be sufficient to convict him with the murder, because a person may very well know where the body of murdered man has been buried without himself having joined in committing the murder. 75 Ind. Cas. 693=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 315. Where the civil surgeon and the sub-assistant surgeon were unable to say what poison was actually administered and there was no evidence on the record to show what poison had been administered. Held, the evidence on the record was quite insufficient to establish the charge. 1923 Lah. 325. Where the body of a dead person is not clearly identified to be that of the particular deceased a conviction cannot be based on the remaining evidence. 5 Lah. L. J. 417. Where a person sees a murder committed and gives no information thereof, his evidence is little better than that of an accomplice. 5 Lah. L. J. 322=1923 Lah. 391. Accompanying the murderess with the deceased and returning the next day without the deceased and subsequent disappearance of accused were held to be not sufficient to prove accused's complicity in the crime of murder. 1922 Lah. 171. Where there is no sufficient corroboration of the approver's story, the accused cannot be convicted. A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 311. Where the accused was convicted on the uncorroborated evidence of an interested witness who was a collateral though not a relative of the deceased, whose family had enmity with the accused: Held, it would not be safe to sustain the conviction upon the evidence of such a solitary witness. A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 76. It is safer to follow the established rule that "the fouler the crime was, the clearer and the plainer the proof ought to be." 1 Pat. L. T. 684. In a case in which murder and robbery form part of one transaction, the recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property by the accused is not only presumptive evidence against him on the charge of robbery but is also evidence against him on the charge of murder. 53 Ind. Cas. 481=20 Cr. L. J. 753. Before a plea of guilty is accepted in a case in which the accused is charged with murder the record should clearly show that the accused understood and admitted such facts as would bring the offence within the definition of murder and that he does not plead any of the exceptions set in the Penal Code. 20 Cr. L. J. 540=51 Ind. Cas. 780=(1919) U. B. R. 137. The mere fact that an accused person is able successfully to point out the corpus delicti or the plunder or so forth is no proof that he was the murderer. But when an accused person is able successfully to point out not one spot but several there is a presumption that he had something to do with murder. 18 P. R. 1917 Cr.

In a case of murder in which there is no direct evidence against the prisoner but only the kind of evidence that is called circumstantial, the jury have a two-fold task. The jury must first make up their minds what portions of the circumstantial evidence have been established and then when they have got that clear, they must ask themselves. "Is this sufficient proof? Do the facts proved exclude the possibility that the deed was done by some other persons?" The jury ought not to convict if they merely think that the accused's guilt is probable. If the jury have doubts as to his guilt, he should have the benefit of the same. 7. P. R. 1917 Cr. A person professing to be an eye-witness is not to be believed when he has denied having recognized the culprit at the time of committing the crime. 22 P. W. R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr. L. J. 279=34 Ind. Cas. 999. A tribunal in a case of murder has to be satisfied not of the probability but of certainty beyond all reasonable doubt, that is to say, doubt which would operate on the mind of a reasonable man, that that accused is guilty. 17 Cr. L. J. 102=32 Ind. Cas. 838. It is not an invariable rule that in all cases the High Court should be convinced that there is very satisfactory proof for motive before upholding a conviction for murder passed by a Sessions Judge. 17 Cr. L. J. 386=35 Ind. Cas. 81. When an accused person charged with murder is able successfully to point out not one but several spots concerned in the commission of the offence there is a presumption that he had something to do with the murder. 36 Ind. Cas. 838. The case against a prisoner, accused of murder of his wife, rested entirely upon the fact that that he slept with his wife alone on the night of the occurrence, and in the morning she was found dead, her body showing that death was caused by strangulation. One of the witnesses deposed that the witness was, for some months, on terms of great intimacy with the deceased, and on the previous afternoon he was seen by the other wife of the accused, who told her husband of it. This was alleged to be the cause of the murder. But the Evidence was not corroborated. Held, that although the case was one of grave suspicion, yet it was not one upon which the Court would be justified in convicting the accused 29 C. 483=6 C. W. N. 595. Where the only evidence, against the accused person is a bundle of cloth, which he produced and which is identified as having been stolen from a person proved to have been murdered, and there is no admissible evidence, against him, upon the record to connect him more directly with the murder it is impossible to do more than convict him under section 411 Penal Code. 220 P. L. R. 1913=19 Ind. Cas. 707=23 P. W. R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr. L. J. 275.

The fact that an accused person has been found with a gun in his hand immediately after a gun was fired and a man was killed in the spot from which the gun was fired may be a strong circumstantial evidence against the accused, but it is an error of law to hold that the burden of proving innocence lies upon the accused under such circumstances. If there are two persons who answer the above descriptions, the circumstantial evidence loses its weight very substantially. Where there is no evidence which of them fired the fatal shot, and when there is no finding that they had a common intention and acted in concert and that the gun was fired in furtherance of their common intention, the legal inference from these findings must be, neither of them is guilty of murder. 11 C. W. N. 1085=6 Cr. L. J. 304. Where the evidence against an accused person convicted of murder of a woman was that of a girl of fifteen, and of a boy of thirteen years, who deposed to have seen the accused throw the deceased down more than once, and who did not, for a long time after the event, say a word about it to any body to whom they would have naturally reported it, had it been true, held acquitting the accused, that the evidence was most improbable and was not free from reasonable suspicion. 2 M. L. T. 496=7 Cr. L. J. 216. To establish a charge of aiding and abetting another in murdering a third party, it must be proved that the alleged abettor knew of the principal's intention to murder the deceased, not merely that such abettor helped the principal in what he did. 1 U. B. R. (1902-1903) Penal Code. 5. Retracted confession, can be sufficiently corroborated by presumptive evidence of murder. 43 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.=8 Ind. Cas. 815=17 P. L. R. 1911=11 Cr. L. J. 717. A conviction on circumstantial evidence cannot be based unless and until all the inferences to be drawn from the whole history of the case point so strongly to the commission of the crime by the accused that the defence theory appears, on the face of it, impossible or highly improbable. The general rule is that, in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. 16 P. W. R. 1911 Cr.=12 Cr. L. J. 412=11 Ind. Cas. 596. In cases in which murder and robbery have been shown to form part of one transaction, it has been held that recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property, while it could be presumptive evidence against a prisoner on the charge of robbery would similarly be evidence against him on the charge of murder. (1911) 2 M. W. N. 478=21 M. L. J. 1071=12 Cr. L. J. 564.

In a case of murder, it is very important that the body of the person murdered should be produced and fully identified. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 325 In a case of murder by opium poisoning, the prosecution evidence that the accused put some sugar into the vessel in which milk was given to the deceased and stirred the milk with his finger after putting the sugar into it, and the deceased died a few hours afterwards, is not sufficient for convicting, the accused, particularly when the motive for murder is not strong and the habit of eating opium is common among the people to which the deceased belonged. 25 P. W. R. 1911 Cr.=12 Cr. L. J. 484=12 Ind. Cas. 92=241 P. L. R. 1911. Identification, unless conclusive, cannot be made the basis of a conviction, specially when the identifiers are nervously upset and do not mention the striking features of the accused in their first information. The greatest suspicion against the accused will not suffice to convict them of a crime unless evidence establishes it beyond all doubt. 16 Cr. L. J. 25=26 Ind. Cas. 329. Where an accused was charged with murder and the only evidence against her was her admission that she threw the child under the impression that it was dead at the time. Held, that the admission should be taken in its entirety, unless there is good reason for the contrary. 9 M. L. T. 316=9 Ind. Cas. 790=12 Cr. L. J. 142=1911 M. W. N. 199. Where the accused admitting that the deceased was at his house immediately before his death, declared that his respiration stopped owing to a fall from the roof and that he took the body and threw it into a tank, where it was afterwards found and he also produced the ornaments worn by the child on the morning on which he was missed, held, that this was not sufficient to find accused guilty of murder, especially when the medical evidence showed that the deceased might have been either intentionally or accidentally strangled, and that the accused could only be found guilty of an offence under s. 411—8 C. W. N. 22=1 Cr. L. J. 10. Where one is charged with the murder of another, three facts have to be established :—First of all, that the person alleged to be murdered is dead ; secondly, that he did by the means alleged on the part of the prosecution and thirdly that the accused intentionally took that part in causing the death which is attributed to him by the prosecution. 7 Bom. L. R. 985=3 Cr. L. J. 85. In a trial for murder the Judge who convicts must do so on a degree of moral certainty as to the guilt of the accused, which, in his opinion, will justify him in passing the extreme sentence of the law. If he is not morally certain of the guilt of the accused so as to pass such a sentence, he is bound to acquit. 6 C. P. L. R. Cr. 3.

To prove by circumstantial evidence, four things are essential ; (1) That the circumstances from which the conclusion is to be drawn should be fully established ; (2) that all the facts should be consistent with the hypothesis ; (3) that the circumstances should be of a conclusive nature and tendency and (4) that the circumstances should, to a moral certainty, actually exclude every hypothesis but the one proposed to be proved. A. W. N. 1881, 139 ; see also 1914 M. W. N. 718=16 Cr. L. J. 195 ; 16 Cr. L. J. 89=26 Ind. Cas. 1001. The Court declined to confirm a capital sentence, but passed the minor sentence, in a case when the conviction rested merely on circumstantial evidence. 3 P. R. 1867 Cr. Where a person was convicted on a charge of murder, on the evidence of a single witness, which was once before discredited, and which now remained uncorroborated, the guilt of the accused is not proved beyond reasonable doubt and he is entitled to an acquittal. 1911, 2 M. W. N. 6=12 Cr. L. J. 488=12 Ind. Cas. 96. Where the complaint to the Police and the evidence of the accused are contradictory, the accused are entitled to benefit of doubt. 1911, 2 M. W. N. 14=12 Cr. L. J. 497=12 Ind. Cas. 217. It is very unsafe to rely upon a witness who materially improves its former statement. 43 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=16 Cr. L. J. 75=26 Ind. Cas. 667. In certain cases of injuries, such as wounds caused by blunt instruments, resulting in death, to support a conviction for murder, it must be proved that bodily injury was intended to be inflicted and that the bodily injury intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 1 Weir 300. In a case of murder where the evidence was most improbable and was not free from reasonable suspicion, an accused should be acquitted. 2 M. L. T. 496=7 Cr. L. J. 216. Unexplained possession of the jewellery of the murdered child, shortly after murder, taken with the direct evidence of another child of 10 years of age is good evidence of murder. 6 M. L. T. 123=4 Ind. Cas. 1051=11 Cr. L. J. 157 ; see also 1913 M. W. N. 145=18 Ind. Cas. 337=14 Cr. L. J. 49. Where the evidence against a person convicted of murder consists only of a statement made by a brother of the deceased that he saw him run away after the commission of the offence and where against that evidence there is a strong array of circumstantial evidence in favour of the accused, e. g. omission of his name in the first report, the missing jewells not being traced out, the accused not absconding after the alleged offence, a reasonable doubt arises, the benefit of which must be given to the accused. 1911, 2 M. W. N. 373=12 Ind. Cas. 577=12 Cr. L. J. 551.

When an accused exculpates himself in his confession, it cannot be used against his co-accused in an offence of murder. 1911, 2 M. W. N. 375=12 Cr. L. J. 562. Where there is a clear prima facie case of murder, the Sessions Judge cannot, on a plea of guilty by the accused, convict him of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, while there is no proof adduced of grave and sudden provocation. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 410. In grave cases such as murder, the record of a confession, among other records should be in plain and legible writing. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 837=Cr. Rg. 50 of 1896. A confession nominally made to a third party, for instance, to a Zaildar, in the presence of the police and after the arrival of the Thanadar who at the time of the confession was sitting a few yards off, is also inadmissible in evidence under s. 25 Evidence Act. 14 P. R. 1911 Cr.

= 12 Ind. Cas. 973 = 12 Cr. L. J. 597. In this case, the accused, who were convicted of murder, were acquitted by the Chief Court on the ground that the evidence did not exclude every reasonable hypothesis but that of the guilt of the accused. 5 P. R. 1872 Cr. It is most unsafe to rely on circumstantial evidence where separate pieces are apparently connected and not fitting in with rational conduct of men. A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 169. Causal witness deposing that accused informed his intention of murder should not be believed. A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 169. Evidence as to motive should not be considered at first. Proper course is to examine evidence as to commission of crime first. Time of post mortem should be recorded to determine time of death. A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 119. Mere pressing of mouth of deceased does not amount to murder when death is due to blows dealt beforehand by another person. A. I. R. 1930 All. 45. Possession of stolen goods recently after murder is material evidence to support conviction. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 379. Conviction should not be based on probabilities and suspicions. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 460. Where prosecution witness was found untruthful as to greater part of evidence, accused should not be convicted on residue without corroboration. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 460. Where the only evidence of identification is a dying deposition and the incident took place in a moonless night, an accused should not be convicted under s. 302. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 60.

When men who expected a lathi fight use their lathis with the result that a man is killed, it must be taken, in the absence of special circumstances, that they know that they were doing an act so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. 27 A. L. J. 244 = 116 Ind. Cas. 19 = 30 Cr. L. J. 559 = A. I. R. 1929 All. 160. If a person receives grievous injuries and is detained in hospital and as a result of these injuries pneumonia supervenes and the victim dies, the perpetrators of the attack upon him are guilty of murder. 110 Ind. Cas. 230 = 29 Cr. L. J. 678 = A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 851. Where a person ordered his men to beat the other party and in consequence of which order the people of that party were beaten and as a result some men were killed, that person is undoubtedly guilty of abetment of murder. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 752; A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 100. If some persons assist an accused to murder a certain man, whether by themselves assaulting him or by preventing his friends from assisting him they are guilty of the same offence as is committed by the accused, whereas, if they merely go to the spot with some innocent intention, and the accused suddenly commits a murder without their assistance and possibly contrary to their wishes, they can only be guilty of the offence, if any, which they themselves commit, and they should be sentenced without regard to the fact that their companion committed murder. 104 Ind. Cas. 242 = 28 Cr. L. J. 802 = A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 321. Where the appellant and his son attacked the deceased who succumbed to the injuries, and it was put forward in defence of the appellant that the sole common intention of the appellant that his son was to cause grievous hurt to the deceased by the use of a spear and long bamboo, and that thereafter when the appellant's actions ceased, the son proceeded to stab deceased to death whilst appellant stood aside and took no further part in the matter; Held, confirming the conviction under s. 302 I. P. Code, that the intention and actions of appellant and his son could not be divided into two parts and the appellant was rightly convicted under s. 302 read with s. 34 = 27 Cr. L. J. 827 = 95 Ind. Cas. 603 = 5 Bur. L. J. 12. A person charged with offence of murder can be convicted under s. 201, Penal Code without a further charge being made against him under that section, and such a conviction is warranted by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 7 Lah. 84 = 94 Ind. Cas. 901 = 27 Cr. L. J. 709 = 27 P. L. R. 583 = A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88. The conviction for murder was set aside and the accused was sentenced for culpable homicide not amounting to murder by the High Court. 27 P. L. R. 6 = 8 Lah. L. J. 51. Where offences under ss. 149 and 302 I. P. Code are committed against three different persons there should be separate heads of charge and not a single head of charge against the accused. 44 C. L. J. 253 = A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 17.

By-standers encouraging acts of murder are guilty. 85 Ind. Cas. 130 = 47 A. 276 = 26 Cr. L. J. 450. Swinging sideways blows of a lathi causing rupture of the liver resulting in death is an offence under s. 325 and not under s. 302. A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 135. Even though there is no evidence to suggest that the accused physically assisted the actual murderer in killing the deceased, but there is evidence that the accused went all the way from their house to the scene of murder and were present at the time when and the place where the murder was committed and gave moral support to the crime which was committed in their interests, the accused are guilty under

s. 302 I. P. Code. 22 A. L. J. 1075. In the course of a fight between two parties one of the men in the first party was shot by a gun from the second party and died. It was not found whether the shot had been fired by any person of the second party or whether the death was due to the gun going off itself during the struggle for its possession. Held that the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt and they were not guilty of murder. 6 Lah. L. J. 271 1924 Lah. 720. An accused is guilty under this section, where he caused the death of his 14 years old wife, who was physically weak and epileptic, by such beating which may not be sufficient to cause the death of a person of sound health but which he knew would cause the death of a person of such a weak state of health. A. I. R. 1923 All. 545. Where the accused joined in beating the deceased when he was on the ground with lathis and inflicted such serious injury to him that he died two days afterwards. Held, that the accused must be deemed to have known that they were causing injury likely to cause death and death having resulted they were guilty of murder. 45 A. 727=21 A. L. J. 623=74 Ind. Cas. 858=24 Cr. L. J. 826; see also 69 Ind. Cas. 439=23 Cr. L. J. 711=1923 Lah. 68; 73 Ind. Cas. 961=24 Cr. L. J. 721=1924 Mad. 41. Where a number of persons armed with deadly weapons set upon a man and killed him, their common intention can be presumed to be to cause death or such bodily injury as would make them guilty of murder. 69 Ind. Cas. 449=23 Cr. L. J. 721. The deceased died of septic poisoning in respect of wounds inflicted by the accused some two months previously. The wounds were not inflicted on any vital part. Held, the case was on the border line and though the accused must be held to have intended to cause bodily injury which was likely to cause death, degree of probability was not high enough to justify a conviction under s. 302 I. P. Code but it was an offence under the first part of s. 304. 2 Bur. L. J. 239. Where the accused expected to find the deceased to come to a particular place to prosecute his intrigue with a girl who was betrothed with one of them and were lying in wait armed with spears and intended to murder him, if he did, the provocation is not sudden and the accused were not deprived of their power of self-control, so that the accused in such a case are guilty of murder. 35 Cr. L. J. 1476=1934 Cr. C. 459=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 239.

Where it was doubtful whether appellant poisoned her husband and from the circumstances it was equally possible that some body else had done the foul deed, the benefit of doubt was given to the accused. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 537. In a case where as a result merely of a boyish quarrel just a short time before the accused stabbed the deceased with a pen knife four inches in length there can be no conviction for murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, when the corpus delicti is not established. The offence of which the accused is guilty is voluntarily causing grievous hurt by an instrument used for cutting. 1922 Lah. 26. Where one man sets up touching another with a heavy lathi, and still more when two or more do so, it is more than likely that one blow at least will land on the head of the man attacked, however careful his assailants may be to avoid the head and that he will die of a fractured skull in consequence. 64 Ind. Cas. 838=23 Cr. L. J. 54; see also 20 A. L. J. 900=L. R. 3 A. 161 Cr. Where a wife who was carrying on a liaison with a stranger wanted to marry the stranger and acting on his advice put some sugar containing arsenic in the food prepared by her for her husband under the impression that the sugar would make her husband submissive to her will and the husband died of the effects of the arsenic. Held, that the wife not having been aware that she was administering a poison to her husband, was not guilty of murder. 4 Lah. L. J. 445. Where it is impossible from the nature of the injuries inflicted, to come to any other conclusion than that the persons who committed the crime, if they were more than one, had a clear and determined intention of doing the victim to death, it is immaterial which of the participants in the crime struck the fatal blow. 6 Pat. L. J. 241=2 Pat. L. T. 565=61 Ind. Cas. 785=22 Cr. L. J. 443. In a case of murder by Dhatūra poisoning, it is to be determined with what object it is administered. Its use may be merely in order to facilitate the commission of robbery. It does not per se and necessarily import contemplation of the victim's death as a means towards or as incidental to the main end of that offence. The point is to be decided with regard to the circumstances of each particular case and the best indication of the intention of the offender can be gathered from the amount of Dhatūra which he administered if a very large quantity of Dhatūra is administered the offender shall be presumed to intend to cause death of the victim for the successful termination of his crime. 4 P. L. R. 1920; 19 P. R. Cr. 1919=51 Ind. Cas. 670=20 Cr. L. J. 510. Where no adequate motive for murder was proved a perusal of medical evidence showed that although there were two confused wounds on the head, a bruise on the fore-head and a bruise on the neck there was no fracture of any bones of the skull, nor apparently any injury caused to the brain. Nor was there any fracture of any bone of the body. From the medical evidence it appeared that it was merely intended to give deceased a severe beating. The medical witness was of opinion that death probably resulted from direct violence. Held, that the accused cannot be held to have intended to cause the death. 1 Lah. L. J. 247.

An appellant was found to have killed his step-father, who was an infirm old man and an invalid, and who consented to being killed, the appellant's motive being to get three innocent men hanged. Held that the 5th Exception to s. 300 applied to the case and that he could not be convicted under s. 302, but only under s. 34 Part 1, Penal Code. 45 P. R. 1917 Cr. Where it was found that the accused caused the death of the deceased by stabbing him with the intention of causing such injury as was likely to cause death, the most that the accused could be convicted of on such finding was culpable homicide not amounting to murder and the conviction of murder was wrong. 17 Cr. L. J. 544=36 Ind. Cas. 592. Where a man gives Dhutura to another in such a large quantity as to result in his death within three or four hours, although he may not have had any intention to kill, he must be held to have known that his act in giving a dangerous substance in such a quantity was likely to cause death. 6 A. L. J. 129=31 A. 148=9 Cr. L. J. 383=1 Ind. Cas. 765. When Their Lordships are of opinion that by some disregard of the form of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, some substantial and grave injustice has been done, then, whatever doubts they may have of the appellant's innocence, or whatever suspicion they may entertain of his guilt, or however great may be their reluctance to interfere with, or overrule the decisions of the Indian Courts in criminal matters, Their Lordships think they are bound to advise His Majesty that the conviction should not be allowed to stand. 17 C. W. N. 1110 P. C.=14. M. L. T. 263=1913 M. W. N. 806=15 Bom. L. R. 910=25 M. L. J. 518=14 Cr. L. J. 577. The applicant's cattle were doing considerable damage to the crops belonging to complainants who drove them to the cattle-pound. While they were in the way to the pound the accused came armed with lathis, to rescue the cattle. At the command given by one of them the others assaulted the deceased and beat him with the result that he died. Held, that the offence was committed in pursuance of the common object and each one of the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 302 I. P. Code. 13 A. L. J. 410=29 Ind. Cas. 91.

A gang of persons, making preparations to commit dacoity was discovered in the limits of a certain village and was pursued by villagers who seized and arrested two accused who were members of the gang. Shortly afterwards a dacoit at large fired a gun and killed one of the villagers. The accused were thereupon tried for the offence of murder under s. 302 read with ss. 149 and 34 Penal Code. Held, that the accused were not guilty of murder, for the separation of the two accused from the gang having been prior to the murder, there could be no common object, and neither s. 149 nor s. 34 applied. 17 Bom. L. R. 906=8 Bom. Cr. C 118. Charges under ss. 302 and 201 Penal Code, cannot be combined. 2 Weir, 301. If men will use such a formidable and dangerous weapon as a lathi with such violence and on such part of the body as causes death immediately or soon afterwards, they should be convicted of murder and not merely culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A. W. N. 1890. 74. Although it is true that it is for the person who has taken the life of another to show that the homicide was accidental, or that it did not amount to murder, yet it is necessary in order to throw the burden of exculpating himself on the accused in a case of murder, that the witnesses for the prosecution should have told a story which can be believed in itself and that, the Judge is satisfied that they are not concealing circumstances which would go to reduce the offence if disclosed. A. W. N. 1897. 21. Where four persons attacked one man, who, in consequence of the attack, died subsequently, held, that the assailants are guilty under s. 302 I. P. Code, if the common intention of the assailants was to cause death or bodily injury likely to cause death or sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. 13 Cr. L. J. 159=13 Ind. Cas. 847. A person who inflicts injury on the person of another, which ends fatally and which the former should have known was likely to cause death, is guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder, though he had no wish to cause death or any motive to do so. 14 Cr. L. J. 115=18 Ind. Cas. 675=1913 M. W. N. 556; see also 5 W. R. Cr. 32; 2 L. B. R. 125=1 Cr. L. J. 184; 4 W. R. Cr. 33. The causing of death by an act done with the intention of causing death cannot alternately be offence of murder or the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, neither s. 236 Cr. Pro. Code, nor section 73, I. P. Code being applicable to the case. 11 P. R. 1887 Cr. Where the accused, a menial, servant being ordered to attend his masters, when they had announced their intention of committing murder, accompanied them with the intention of rendering such assistance as might be required of him, and his masters entered the house and killed the deceased, the servant standing at the door of the house, held, that the accused was guilty of murder. 1 Weir, 296.

Where the prisoner killed his sister and hurt himself with the intention of throwing the blame on a faction opposed to that to which he belonged, held, that he was guilty of murder. 8 B. H. C. R. Where action resulting in death is continuous and is impossible to be resolved into different actions inspired by different motives, the accused is guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 27. If husband discovers wife in act of adultery and kills her he is guilty of manslaughter only and not murder. This rule cannot be extended when the relationship is not of husband and wife. A. I. Where the accused had grudge against deceased and assaulted him with a stabbing weapon, he is guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 534. Failure of prosecution to establish additional motives is not fatal defect in prosecution case. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 490. Person striking with weapon like lathi on vulnerable part of the body as head must be deemed to have intended to cause such injury as he knew was likely to cause death. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 490. Panchayat was convened to consider act of stealing by accused. One of the panchayats insisted that the matter should be reported to the police. Accused struck heavy blow at him and thereby caused death. The accused was held guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 60. In the absence of extenuating circumstances, a person who inflicts injury with knife intends nothing short of inflicting death and as such commits the offence of murder. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 972. Woman of middle age administering arsenic must accept full responsibility of her action. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 502. Where it is not known who delivered the fatal blow, the accused should be held guilty of abetment of murder. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 164.

Causing death by the administration of Dhutura poison in toddy for the purpose of detecting thieves will amount to murder. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 296.

Murder—extenuating circumstances.—The mere suspicion of a wife's conduct is not an extenuation of a deliberate wife murder. Men cannot butcher their wives and escape hanging on the plea that they suspected them of misconduct. 30 L. W. 229=1929 M. W. N. 269=116 Ind. Cas. 142=30 Cr. L. J. 630=A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 495. The murderer is 19 or 20 years of age and murder prompted by veneration for founder of religion is not extenuating circumstances. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 157. The accused was brought to bay during his escape is not extenuating circumstance. 139 Ind. Cas. 213=33 Cr. L. J. 722=1932 Cr. C. 857=A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 818 (F. B.); see also A. I. Motive, adequacy of—If the Court is satisfied as to the fact of murder the adequacy or inadequacy of the motive is not of importance. 1929 M. W. N. 592. In a charge of murder it is wholly immaterial that the motive is inadequate. 100 Ind. Cas. 226=28 Cr. L. J. 258; 35 Cr. L. J. 1283=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 368=1934 Cr. C. 617. The accused, a student aged 17 was alleged to have distributed certain sweets containing arsenic among his fellow students. All who had received it ate it then and there except one person who took it home and gave it to his young niece and father. All the persons showed signs of arsenic poisoning and all of them recovered except the niece who died. It appeared that the accused himself had eaten a portion of the sweets and there was no motive for the crime. There was no evidence that the accused prepared the sweets. Held, that the case was doubtful and that the accused could not be convicted of murder. 30 P. L. R. 424=10 Lah. L. J. 555=115 Ind. Cas. 469=30 Cr. L. J. 478.

Joint offence—Where two assailants, bearing dangerous instruments, assaulted the deceased, and the blows were aimed at the head, with the result that two fatal injuries were caused, and these injuries were such as could not be caused with one and the same instrument, Held, that each of the two assailants was responsible for one of the fatal injuries and, therefore, both were guilty under s. 302. 118 Ind. Cas.

Where an accused did not actually inflict any injury upon the deceased but accompanied the co-accused on his murderous errand and was his confederate throughout, being himself armed like his co-accused with a weapon to meet all eventualities. Held, that the accused was as much responsible for the murder as his co-accused who had actually struck the fatal blow. 116 Ind. Cas. 613=30 Cr. L. J. 637=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 791. There is no practice to the effect that when a large number of persons participated in a murder only those persons should be selected for death sentence who are shown to have taken an actual part in causing the death. Prima facie all the person convicted should be sentenced to the extreme penalty unless special circumstances are shown in favour of the alternative punishment of transportation for life. 8 Pat. 181=117 Ind. Abettor.—Person instigating others to beat deceased and in whose presence injuries are inflicted by such others causing death is guilty under s. 302. 1933 Cr. C. 1387=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 928; see also A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 660=1933 Cr. C. 882; A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 236=11 Rang. 354=1933 Cr. C. 907.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and Office of Magistrate, etc) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, _____ on or about the _____ day of _____, at _____ did commit murder by intentionally or (knowingly) causing the death of (name of the deceased), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of Court of Session or (High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the above charge.

303. Whoever, being under sentence of transportation for life, commits murder, shall be punished with death.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

304. Whoever commits culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, if the act by which

or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both, if the act is done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

Scope.—"A greater latitude of discretion is given to the Judge in apportioning the punishment of culpable homicide when it does not amount to murder; for he is empowered to pass any sentence ranging from transportation for life to a small fine. In general, the Code makes no distinction, either in its definitions and penal provisions, between cases in which a man causes an effect designedly, and cases in which he causes it with knowledge that he is likely to cause it. But this section awards a mere severe punishment to culpable homicides in which the act causing death, is done intentionally for the purpose of causing death, than it does to these homicides in which the act is done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death but without intention to cause it."—Morgan and Macpherson.

The first part of s. 304, is intended to include only those cases in which the act of the accused person would be culpable homicide amounting to murder, but for the fact that it was committed in circumstances which render one or other of the exceptions in s. 300 applicable. 3 P. The provocation contemplated by s. 300 should be of a character to deprive the offender of his self-control. In determining whether it was so, it is admissible to take into account the condition of mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation. 2 M. 122=1 Weir, 302; see also 19 W. R. The distinction between the intention to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and the intention to cause injury likely to cause death depends upon the degree of probability of death resulting from the act committed. Apart from cases falling within the second clause of s. 300, if, from the intentional act of injury committed, the probability of death resulting is high the finding should be that the accused intended to cause death or injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and the conviction should be of murder unless one of the exceptions applies; if there was probability in a less degree of death ensuing from the act committed the finding should be that the accused intended to cause injury likely to cause death, and the conviction should be of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 5 L. Ind. Cas. 679=19 Cr. L. J. 375. The difference between the two parts of s. 304 I. P. Cases.—If in a case it is difficult to determine whether the offence proved to have been committed by the accused is culpable homicide or murder, the proper course is to convict the accused of the lesser offence. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 459. Where a sweeper had been appointed as a Rakha by a jut to watch his crops of gram and on account of the former stealing the staff quarrel ensued and he was strangled to death by the latter. Held, that the culprit was guilty of no offence punishable by the second part of s. 304 I. Where the accused threw his stick at the deceased with such force that it hit him in the head with the point and made a punctured wound which caused his death, held that the accused was not liable to be punished under s. 304 A, because injury was intentionally caused to the deceased. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 673. A person cannot be convicted under this section on mere probability. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 686=Cr. Rag. 4 of 1894. The prisoner, a fully developed adult man, was charged with causing the death of his wife a girl aged about eleven years and three months. The death was caused by hæmorrhage from a laceration in the upper part of the vagina caused by the prisoner having sexual intercourse with her. Held, that the prisoner was guilty of an offence, under s. 338 and not under s. 304 or 304 A. or 325 of the Penal Code. 18 C. 49. Where the accused found his sister having illicit connection with another man and in a sudden passion killed them both on the spot, held, that the accused received very grave and sudden provocation, sufficient to reduce the case to a culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 18A. 497=A. W. N. 1896, 161. Where there was a fight between the deceased and the accused, but the deceased struck the first blow, and no motive sufficient to induce the accused to deliberately murder the deceased was proved, held that the accused were guilty of culpable homicide only though the deceased died as a result of the injuries inflicted by the accused. 5 M. The punishment to be inflicted for one offence under s. 304, for murder of the adulterer caused by sudden provocation by the husband of the woman is discretionary. The principal object in view by which the Courts should be guided is a sufficient deterrent punishment. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I, 1213.

Where death results from a violent attack the accused should be committed to the Court of Sessions a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1 C. L. R. 141. When a Judge convicts on a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, he should state under which of the exceptions of s. 300, Penal Code the case falls. 1 Agra. Cr. 3. The Judge in this case did not find that the accused intended to cause death nor was it found that the act was done with the intention of causing any particular bodily injury such as the offender knew to be likely to cause death, nor that the offender knew that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. In view of the facts above stated the offence was held to fall under s. 304 I. P. Code. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. I, 215; see also U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. I, 211: 6 P. L. R. 1903=30 P. The accused rushed wildly into a house and without considering the consequences attacked his mother-in-law, a woman of fifty-five with a dao and by mistake cut another woman of sixty-one on the arm, who died of the shock by the cut. The wound was not such as would ordinarily cause the death of a woman of that age. Held, that he committed only culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 4 L. B. R. 367=9 Cr. L. J. 364. The deceased having enticed away a married woman, the father and the husband of the woman, armed with sticks waited for him on the road by which he was expected to pass, and gave him blows on the chest and back, but refrained from hitting him above the head; held, that the accused were liable to be convicted under s. 304 (2). 10 P. R. 1890 Cr. Where a person snatches up a log of heavy wood, and strikes another with it on a vital part with so much force and vindictiveness as to cause that person's death almost on the spot, that act must be held to have been done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death; but if the act is done without forethought, in the heat of passion and on a sudden quarrel, offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 7 W. R. Cr. 70. The question for solution in cases where death is caused by a single blow given in anger, on the impulse of the moment, with a weapon not deadly in its nature, is always one of fact, not of law, as to the intention or knowledge with which the striker acted. 5 P. R. 1893. Cr.; 1624 Lah. 493. Where the right of private defence has been exceeded the accused is guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 344=138 Ind. Cas. 418=33 Cr. Where the common intention of the assailant was only to cause griveous hurt and there was only one serious blow on the head and the other blows on the head and the other parts of the body were of a comparatively slight nature: Held, that it cannot be held that the assailants intended to cause the death of their victim or to cause such bodily injury or was likely to cause death. The case therefore fell within the purview of the second part of s. 304 and not under the first part. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 80.

Where the accused, a police constable, caused the deceased's death by violently beating him in the course of a police enquiry into a theft case, held, that the accused was not liable to be convicted for culpable homicide, but was guilty of an offence under s. 300 Penal Code. 86 P. R. 1886. Where in arresting the deceased who with others, was attempting to commit theft, the accused struck a blow on the deceased with a stick, held, that the accused had not used excessive violence and were not therefore, guilty of culpable homicide. 26 P. R. 1872 Cr. In a quarrel between himself and the deceased the accused, gave her a blow on the side of the head with a heavy hammer, which he picked up on the spur of the moment, and caused thereby her death; held that the accused were merely guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 30 P. struck the deceased with a bamboo, thereby causing fracture of the skull, which resulted in death, held that the accused should be charged with culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 1 Weir. 301; see also 2 L. B. R. 204. Accused were hill-men and three of them were devil dancers who attempted at C's request or at any rate with his consent, to dispossess C's wife of devil by applying a hot ladle to her mouth and throat and to various parts of her body, with the result that she died. Held, that the accused were guilty under s. 326 and not under s. 304A. A. I. R. 1935 All. 282. Where the crime is unpremeditated this section applies. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 149. Where two accused had the common intention of beating the party of which the deceased was a member and the deceased died as consequences of a blow struck in the beating, held that both the accused were responsible under s. 304 and 34 I. P. Code. A. I. R. 1935 All. 504.

Causing death by branding a thief without the knowledge that the act was so imminently dangerous that it would in all probability cause his death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, is culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304. 7 W. R. Cr. 54. When a man of full age (i. e. above 18 years) submits himself to an emasculation, performed neither by skilful hand, nor in the least dangerous way, and death ensues in consequence, the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 5 W. R. Cr. 7. Where the accused on being attacked by the deceased armed with a large club, fired at him, without any particular aim, but lowering the muzzle of his gun, so as to hit a vital part, and death ultimately resulted from the wound inflicted, held that the accused had not exercised a legal right of private defence, as he could have escaped by standing back, and that he was therefore, guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 13 P. R. 1868 Cr; but see A. W. N. 1882. 172. It is a doubtful question whether a person, constructively guilty of murder under s. 304 of the Penal Code, can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149 of the Code, so as to make others by a double construction, guilty of murder. 8 C. 739=12 C. L. R. 233. Section 304 coupled with s. 149 applies only to such persons who, though not taking an active part in unlawful assembly, are liable to be punished by reason of their being members of the unlawful assembly, and a person being killed in prosecution of the common object. 6 C. W. N. 98. Where a person, on the spur of the moment, in the heat of passion, and without any premeditation and motive for causing death, seizes a chhavi the first weapon which came to his hands, and inflicts with it a blow on the head of another which results in the death of the latter, the former's act falls within the 2nd part of s. 304 Penal Code. But in such a case the culprit deserves the maximum sentence of imprisonment provided for that offence. 4 P. W. R. 1934 Cr=3 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 178=22 Ind. Cas. 754. When the only inmates of the house were the husband and his two wives, and the deceased's elder wife was habitually ill-treated and half-starved by her husband, and at last she was found suffering from a serious injury to head, from the effect of which she died three days after she was admitted to hospital where she was too ill to make any statement and there was no indication, that the injury was accidental or self-inflicted, and the explanation given by the husband as to the injury was unsatisfactory and highly improbable, the presumption is that the injury was caused by her husband. Held, also that, to inflict such an injury on the head of a woman already reduced by ill-treatment to such a poor condition, was an act which warrants the finding that the culprit must have known that it was likely that death would be the result, and was sufficient to bring him under s. 304, part 2 I. Where grave discrepancies between the statement of the deceased contained in the first report and the evidence of his witnesses as to the persons attacking him and giving him fatal injuries, throw a great doubt on the whole case, the benefit of which must be given to the accused. 23 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=172 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 530=24 Ind. Cas. 842. B went to a police station and made report of an assault against F and others. The police declined to take action and he referred to a Magistrate. The accused F with his companions went to the house of B, evidently with the intention of taunting her with her failure to obtain any satisfaction from the police. A tenant of B, who was in B's house at the time, picked up a stick and came out abusing and threatening the intruders. F struck the tenant one severe blow with a chhavi at his head from which he died. F was convicted of an offence under s. 304, Penal Code and his companions of the offence under s. 149 read with s. 334 I. Penal Code. Held, that F was rightly convicted of the offence, under the first part of s. 304, but his companions must be acquitted, for, none of them took any part in any assault at B's house. 55 P. Where in committing dacoity, the accused stuffed a cloth into the deceased's mouth in order to silence him and not with any idea of killing him, held, they must be convicted under ss. 304 and 395 I. P. Code, and not under s. 302 and 396 I. P. Code, 18 M. L. T. 103=1915 M. W. N. 621=16 Cr. L. J. 614=30 Ind. Cas. 438. An offence under this section has been committed when severe beating is given to a woman to cast out evil spirit with party's consent resulting in death. 1 U. B. R. 1902=1903, Penal Code 1.

If the immediate cause of death be the improper administration of dangerous drugs, then the persons who administered such drugs without any excuse are the persons "who caused the death". L. B. R. (1872-1892). 179. Where death was caused by a blow with a stick, but it appeared that death would not have been caused by the violence apparently used, had the deceased's spleen been in a healthy condition and that the accused did not prove that the deceased's spleen was diseased, held that the accused was merely guilty of voluntarily causing hurt by a dangerous weapon, but not of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A. W. N. 1881, 112. Where the husband, a fully developed adult man had several intercourse with his child wife who was an immature girl and he did it with such a violence as to rupture the vagina and destroy the partition between the vagina and the rectum and the wife died in consequence he commits an offence under s. 304 of the Penal Code as he did a dangerous act with a wanton disregard as to the consequence with his wife and so caused her death. 11 S. L. R. 76. Where the accused were convicted under s. 304, part 2, Penal Code, for causing the death of the deceased by violence, and the medical evidence showed that the cause of death was either concussion of brain due to head injuries or possibly opium poisoning, and the body bore no signs of injuries except four slight superficial lacerations but no fracture of any bone, while on the other hand opium was found in the stomach and the first report did make mention of the fact that the deceased had admitted having taken opium: Held, that the prosecution had failed to prove that the death was caused by any act of the accused, and they were therefore, entitled to an acquittal. 16 P. W. R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr. L. J. 147=33 Ind. Cas. 627. Where the accused proved to have driven his motor car in a rash manner during night while he was in a drunken condition and he run his car against four persons carrying a bier and injured two of them so severely that they died subsequently. Held, that the accused should be convicted under ss. 337 and 394 I. P. Code and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment. 1929 M. W. N. 395. Where a person was attacked by five men all armed with lathis and where therefore in defending himself he hit them back inflicting injuries which in the case of two of the assailants resulted in their death and where the person was charged with having exceeded the limits of private defence, held, that in such situation it was not possible for one to restrict himself to exactly the necessary number and force of blows and that therefore the accused should be acquitted. 117 Ind. Cas. 937=1929 Cr. C. 38=30 Cr. L. J. 863=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 494.

The accused inflicted the injury by which death was caused with his dang in a fit of provocation. Two blows were struck on the head causing fracture and the third blow fell on the chest of the deceased. Held, that the conviction should be under s. 304, part 2, and not under s. 304 part 1, I. P. Code. 11 Lah. L. J. 52=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 180. Where in a scuffle the accused struck three lathi blows which fractured his bones and caused gangrene resulting in death but it was found that the accused did not intend to cause death. Held that the accused was not guilty of murder but was guilty of manslaughter. 42 A. 302=18 A. L. J. 224=58 Ind. Cas. 463=21 Cr. L. J. 783. Two parties armed with lathis indulged in a fight, and one of the contesting parties received injuries from the effects of which he died. It was uncertain which of the several persons composing the opposite side struck the fatal blow. Held, that these persons are guilty of an offence under s. 304 I. P. Code. 58 Ind. Cas. 242; see also 60 Ind. Cas. 676=22 Cr. L. J. 276=3 U. P. L. R. Lah. 34. Where the accused possessed by a superstitious belief made an offering of his child to a crocodile in a certain tank, with a pure heart believing that though the crocodile would doubtless take the child away, it would return the child unimpaired and the child would thereafter have a charmed life and attain to a good old age. Held, that as the accused had no intention of causing death to the child, he was guilty of an offence under the last clause of s. 304 I. P. Code as what he did was with knowledge that his act would result in the death of the child. 33 C. L. J. 179=25 C. W. N. 676=62 Ind. Cas. 414=22 Cr. L. J. 526. If two or more people are found to have had a common intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and that result ensue, all are guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, quite irrespective of who accused the particular injury leading to death. 9 O. & A. L. R. 1024; 1923 Lah. 336; 72 Ind. Cas. 532=24 Cr. L. J. 421; 83 Ind. Cas. 636=26 Cr. L. J. 76=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 284. When the accused killed another whom he saw occupying the same bed with the wife of his cousin and there was no motive for the crime, he must have acted under sudden and grave provocation and the conviction can only be under s. 304 I. P. Code. 1923 Lah. 312. Even when there is no evidence as to previous existence of any serious enmity and the affairs arose out of a petty quarrel of the moment, this is hardly an extenuating circumstance in favour of accused using a weapon like a chhavi on slight provocation which shows a callous disregard of human life for which he must suffer the consequence. 73 Ind. Cas. 932=24 Cr. L. J. 708=1928 Lah. 326.

Where the Court finds that the accused must have known he was likely to cause death and concluded from that an offence under s. 300 (4) I. P. Code, the conviction must be changed into one under s. 304 I. P. Code. 2 Bur. L. J. 99. Where the charge is one of murder under s. 302 and there is no question of the first exception to section 300 being admitted by the prosecution and a Magistrate specially empowered under s. 30 Cr. Pro. Code heard the case and convicted under s. 304 I. P. Code, the proceedings were quashed and the accused committed to the sessions. 69 Ind. Cas. 459=23 Cr. L. J. 731. During a sudden and unpremeditated affray a person was killed. The evidence showed that even after he fell down incapacitated, the accused continued striking him. Held, a plea of self-defence was not sustainable and they were guilty under s. 304. 6 Lah. L. J. 483. Where the accused, a youth of about 18 years forcibly committed rape on a girl of 12 and the girl's vagina was ruptured and as a result of shock the girl died. Held, that the accused was not guilty under s. 304 I. P. Code of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as death was not the natural consequence of the simple sexual offence but he was guilty of rape only. 3 Pat. 410=83 Ind. Cas. 651=1924 Pat. 553. In the midst of a quarrel, a man was abused by his sister-in-law and he struck her with a stone. Her skull was fractured and she died. Held he acted on the impulse of the moment and could be convicted only under s. 304 I. P. Code. L. R. 5 A. 175=25 Cr. L. J. 809=81 Ind. Cas. 320=1925 All. 4. In the course of a dispute about drawing water from a tap, the accused drew a knife and stabbed the deceased piercing the chest wall and cutting the heart. Held, though the blow was struck in a sudden fight without pre-meditation, the accused must have known that striking in the chest with a dangerous weapon might prove fatal and was therefore guilty under s. 304 (2). 25 Cr. L. J. 1289=82 Ind. Cas. 361=1925 Lah. 148; see also A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 189. Where three men armed with dangs attacked another and caused two grievous hurts, it can be presumed that they all intended to cause or knew that they were likely to cause grievous hurt. Where only one blow was struck on the head which resulted in death and there was no evidence to show which of the three accused struck that blow, none of them can be convicted of culpable homicide 6. Lah. L. J. 268=1924 Lah. 555. Where the skull of the deceased was fractured as the result of a blow on the head in an attack upon one man by four persons who beat him with lathis but there was no other grievous hurt and it was not known which of the accused struck the blow which fractured the skull and resulted in his death. Held, the accused did not know that death was likely to be caused but they must have known that grievous hurt was likely to be caused, and that they committed therefore the offence of causing grievous hurt. 6 Lah. L. J. 317=1924 Lah. 654.

Where a person hits another on the temple with a lathi he must be taken to have intended to cause such hurt as would in the ordinary course of nature cause death. Where death ensues, he is guilty under s. 304 I. P. Code. 26 Cr. L. J. 1160=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 482=88 Ind. Cas. 520. A person can be convicted under s. 304 (1), I. P. Code in a murder trial, only if one of exceptions to s. 300, is proved. 86 Ind. Cas. 826=26 Cr. L. J. 890=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 549. Where death was due to a single blow by only one out of five people but the assailant could not be spotted out, all cannot be convicted under s. 309 read with s. 34, but only under s. 325. 86 Ind. Cas. 337=26 Cr. L. J. 753=A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 553. The accused struck the deceased, who was sitting with certain enemies of the accused watching an entertainment, on the head with a lathi which resulted in his death. Held, that the accused must have known that he was likely to cause death and was guilty under s. 304 (2) and five years' rigorous imprisonment was appropriate sentence. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 111. Where the wounds inflicted on the deceased were not serious but such as would not individually amount to more than simple hurt and no motive for murder was established. Held, that the offence was only culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 26 P. L. R. 702=7 Lah. L. J. 524=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 621. In order to remove a culpable homicide from the category of murder the provocation must not only be grave but also sudden, and must have by its gravity and suddenness deprived the accused of the power of self-control. 83 Ind. Cas. 712=26 Cr. L. J. 152=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 493. Section 34 which is based on common intention cannot possibly be used with the second part of s. 304 which expressly excludes intention. 26 Cr. L. J. 827=85 Ind. Cas. 475=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 913. Where the death is caused by knifestabb in sudden fight, the offence falls under this section. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 148. Mere apprehension of hurt will not entitle a person to plead "private defence" to a conviction under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code. 27 P. L. R. 430=95 Ind. Cas. 276=27 Cr. L. J. 756=8 Lah. L. J. 455. The High Court set aside the conviction for an offence under section 304 (2) on the ground that the prosecution witnesses were partial and their testimony palpably false. 27 P. L. R. 22=95 Ind. Cas. 597=27 Cr. L. J. 821=8 L. L. J. 183.

Presumably every body knows that the abdomen is a most delicate and vulnerable part of the human body, and if a man with that knowledge kicks the abdomen with such violence as to cause fracture of two ribs and rupture of the spleen which was normal he should be presumed to have done so with the knowledge that he, by so kicking, was likely to cause death. 96 Cas. 641=27 Cr. L. J. 977=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 313. A lathi is a lethal weapon and, if a person chooses to lay about with a lethal weapon with all the force at his command, it must be presumed that he knew he was likely to cause death. 94 Ind. Cas. 137=27 Cr. L. J. 569=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 426. Where the injuries inflicted by the accused result in death, the question in such cases is not concluded by the amount of reasoning from the mere fact that the injury caused did in fact result in death. What has to be seen is first, what degree of injury did the man intend; and secondly, what did he know as to the consequences of such injury. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 261 (S. B.)=34 C. W. N. 1127=32 Cr. L. J. 187. The mere fact that a member of one unlawful assembly which assailed its victim was a Sikh wearing Kirpan unsheathing with which he dealt the fatal blow to the victim is not sufficient to hold the other members of the assembly constructively liable for causing of death simply because he was wearing a Kirpan. Gian v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 532=122 Ind. Cas. 721=31 Cr. L. J. 448. Seizure of the person and dragging a debtor to his creditor by the peons of the creditor against his will, constitutes an offence of abduction within the meaning of s. 362 thereby giving the person so dragged the right of private defence of his body even to the causing of death subject to restrictions mentioned in section 99. If while defending himself such person strikes the person against whom he was defending on a sudden irrational impulse thereby exceeding the power given to him under the statute and causes death of the other person, the offence comes not under s. 302 but under s. 304. Duroga v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 347. It is not improper to inflict lesser sentence, where there are circumstances demanding exercise of discretion, e. g. absence to strong motive coupled with possibility of murder having been committed without premeditation and under temporary derangement of mind due to fear of being prosecuted and convicted of criminal offence. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 225. Person inflicting wounds in defending himself is not guilty. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 93.

Where there was a sudden quarrel and a fight in the course of which the deceased was stabbed by the accused and the accused himself received an injury from some weapon such as a knife, held, that the accused cannot be said to have taken undue advantage of the deceased since he himself was attacked and wounded also by a knife, and more appropriate section under which the accused should have been convicted is s. 304. 97 Ind. Cas. 952=27 Cr. L. J. 1192; see also 106 Ind. Cas. 449=29 Cr. L. J. 33; 27 A. L. J. 508=A. I. R. 1929 A. 535. Where the accused went along with two other persons who were armed and at the scene of occurrence he gave the order to beat but the others assaulted the deceased so severely that he subsequently died, held, that the reasonable inference is that the accused intended all the results that followed and that he was rightly convicted under ss. 304 and 109. 6 Pat. 627. Where a man receives 3 injuries on his head, it is most improbable that he was attacked by more than 2 persons. 103 Ind. Cas. 58=28 Cr. L. J. 634=1 Luck. C. 197=8 A. I. R. 314. Where it is found that the aggressor was not the accused but the deceased, the Court should not pass a severe sentence. 99 Ind. Cas. 56=28 Cr. L. J. 24. Six persons one of whom was armed with an iron lathi went to take possession of a taur. The deceased person resisted them and the man who was armed with lathi inflicted a fatal injury on the head of the deceased which fractured his skull and killed him. Held, that under the circumstances, the armed person was guilty of offence under s. 304 (2) I. P. Code, and the others of an offence under s. 325. 9 Lah. L. J. 529. Where the wife of the accused and the deceased woman were quarrelling and the accused being provoked by the abuses given to his wife, in sudden anger, struck the deceased a heavy blow on the head with a heavy lathi and fractured her skull and caused her death. Held that the circumstances of the case do not lead to the inference of an intention to kill and it cannot be inferred on the evidence that the accused had the knowledge that the act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death. 8 Pat. L. T. 594=102 Ind. Cas. 349=28 Cr. L. J. 541=8 A. I. C. R. 189. Where the accused inflicted many blows on the body of the deceased, and also used kicks in order to drive away an evil spirit, and thereby caused the death, the accused is guilty under section 304 (2), Penal Code. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 917.

Where the husband and wife were not on very good terms and on one occasion the husband asked for pan and the wife refused pan and threw dirty rice water in his face whereupon the husband beat her with stone and killed her. Held that the refusal of his wife to give him pan was liable to make him angry but the throwing of dirty water in the face was an act which would cause a husband to lose control of himself and would be a grave and sudden provocation and therefore the offence was not one of murder but culpable homicide not amounting to murder. 117 Ind. Cas. 164=30 Cr. L. J. 720=A. I. R. 1920 Pat. 201. If a man joins with another to assault a third even though the original intention may be merely to inflict relatively harmless injuries, and he sees his companion in a course of action which may reasonably be expected to bring about the death of the deceased and takes no steps to interfere with that action or to assist the deceased such an act is an act or omission which renders him liable to be convicted under s. 304 read with section ss. 32 and 34 I. P. Code. It must be apparent to every person that to hold an elderly man's head under water for any longer than is required to inflict a mere ducking is liable to bring about the death of the person. 9 Pat. Jury.—As this section deals with two kinds of culpable homicide, the jury ought to be asked to say under which part they find the accused guilty. 19B. 741.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

304 A. Whoever causes the death of any person by doing any rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—This section applies to rash and negligent acts and does not apply to cases where hurt is voluntarily caused. 2 Bom. L. R. 613. The provisions of this section seems to apply to cases where there is no intention to cause death and no knowledge that the act done, in all probability, would cause death. 14 C. 566. Acts, probably or possibly involving danger to others, but which, in themselves, are not offences, may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338 or 304A, if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. 4 C. 764. Where the act causing death of the accused is in its nature criminal, this section has no application. 12 M. 50.

This section does not apply where there is neither culpable rashness nor culpable negligence in the sense in which those terms are usually accepted. 14 C. P. L. R. Cr. 126; L. B. R. (1872-1892) 89; U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 314; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 89; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 308; 1 Weir. 324; 1 Weir. 326; 14 Bom. L. R. 887; 7 P. W. R. 1913; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 964; 15 A. L. J. 615. This section is not intended to cover cases where there is no intention to cause hurt. 3 A. L. J. 394; see also 3 A. L. J. 678; 25 Cr. L. J. 449; 36 C. 302; 38 C. 855; 4 C. 815; 30 C. W. N. 66; 14 Bom. L. R. 887. This section has no application where the offence is committed voluntarily. 4 C. 764. If a man intentionally commits any offence and consequences beyond his immediate purpose, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if knowledge could not be imputed, still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate, but acts probably or possibly involving danger to others which in themselves are not offences may be offences within the meaning of section 304 A, Penal Code, and kindred actions, if done without due care to guard against dangerous consequences. 15 Cr. L. J. 512; 18 Cr. L. J. 195; 14 Ind. Cas. 195=16 C. W. N. 1055=39 C. 585; 17 Bom. L. R. 217=16 Cr. L. J. 305=28 Ind. Cas. 641. To find a person, who had caused the death of another with an enlarged spleen by blows inflicted on the body and who was charged with culpable homicide, guilty under s. 304 A, it would not do for the juries to infer rashness from the mere fact of the prevalence of the disease of the spleen in the district: but they must be satisfied of the accused's knowledge of such prevalence and of the danger to life involved in the striking on the trunk of the body of a person who might be affected with the disease. 4 C. 815. Where a person is beaten and death ensued on account of the rupture of a diseased spleen, the offence is one under s. 321 and not under s. 304 A, Penal Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 63; see also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 67; 11 P. R. 1880 Cr.; 5 P. W. R. 1912=157 P. L. R. 1913. In India, looking at the passive submission, and submissiveness of the native servant, it would be a dangerous doctrine to hold that the master inside a carriage is entirely guiltless, if his directions brought about the rash and negligent driving. 1 Weir. 322=6 M. H. C. App. 31. A conviction under s. 304 A is not sustainable where death has resulted from violence intentionally directed against the deceased by the accused. The conviction should be under s. 323 I. P. Code. 11 P. R. 1880 Cr. Where, being insulted in a drunken brawl, the accused threw down the deceased and stamped his feet on his body and death ensued within twenty days, the offence was one under s. 323 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 304 A. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 67.

If the surgical operation by an unskilled practitioner causes death of the patient, an offence under this section is committed. 14 C. 566. Where the act causing the death of the accused is in its nature criminal section 304 A of the Penal Code has no application 12 M. 56=1 Weir. 326.

Culpable rashness etc.—Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they will not, and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precaution to prevent this happening. The imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness. Culpable negligence is acting without, the consciousness that illegal and mischievous effects will follow, but in circumstances, which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him, and that if he had, he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection. 7 M. H. C. 119. To come under this section the death should be the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused, and that act must have been the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another negligence. 4 Bom. L. R. 679; 3 Bom. L. R. 494; 32 C. 645. Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act, with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to consequence. 30 C. W. N. 66=33 C. 333=1926 Cal. 300=91 Ind. Cas. 889=27 Cr. L. Where the act is voluntarily caused this section has no application. 2 Bom. L. R. 613; 38 C. 855=15 C. L. J. 512.

The prisoner had been in charge of a police station, the vicinity of which had been troubled by thieves. On one occasion a thief had fired at the prisoner. It having been reported to the prisoner that three thieves were prowling about, he, with other men, went out to patrol. They saw a man crouching under a tree, and thinking he must be a thief, the prisoner fired at him and killed him. The man proved to be a haleara. The prisoner wrote a false report to the effect that the deceased had been killed by thieves. Held that, under the circumstances, the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 304 A. W. N. 1881, 156. The owner of a ferry having the exclusive right to carry passengers across a certain river at a particular spot, and being found to maintain for the purpose a certain number of boats in efficient condition, is liable to be punished under s. 304 A, if he causes the death of any passenger by drowning owing to the unsoundness of one of the boats. 16 A. 472=A. W. N. 1894, 182; see also 6 A. 248=A. W. N. 1884, 71. Rash act means extra-hasty act. A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 326=1933 Cr. C. 1284. Where the evidence of a Civil Surgeon showed that milk was administered in such quantity as to kill the child, but there was no evidence to show that the mother was aware of it, held that she was not guilty of an offence under s. 304 A. 5 N. W. P. 38. The accused, who was watching his field one dark night, hearing a noise in the field shouted whereupon a thief ran out of it, whom he followed and struck with a stick. The thief fell down, and the accused caught him and took him to the zemindar's house. The thief became insensible and subsequently died from the effects of the blow which the accused had given him. Held, with reference to the terms of s. 304 A that the conviction under that section was bad. A. W. N. 1881, 103.

Where, in the deceased's omission to immediately drive pigs, that were grazing upon the accused's land, the latter took up a piece of a brick and threw it at the deceased from a distance of five paces, and it struck him over the spleen, which being in diseased state, was ruptured, and death ensued; held, that the accused was guilty only of hurt, and not of causing death by a rash and negligent act. 3A. 597=A. W. N. 18181, 37. Intentional violence is not a rash or negligent act. 11 P. R. 1880 Cr. Where the accused struck his servant, who was suffering from an enlarged spleen, and thereby caused his death by its rupture, held that he was not guilty of an offence under s. 304 A. 7 P. R. 1877. Where death is caused by an act, which is in itself an offence, s. 304 A. is not applicable. 15 P. R. 1882 Cr; see also 134 Ind. Cas. 772=32 Cr. L. J. 1248=A. I. R.=1931 Lah. 275. Where the accused seeing a stooping child in the early morning, in a place considered by the villagers to be haunted, and considering the child to be a spirit or demon, caused his death by inflicting blows, before he discovered his mistake, held that he was properly convicted under s. 304 A, as he did not act in good faith, i. e. with due care and attention. 11 P. R. 1888 Cr, Section 304. A does not apply to cases of death caused by direct violence intended to cause bodily injury, but without the knowledge that thit is likely to cause death. 34 P. R. 1887, Cr. Where death was caused by the wife administering poison received from her paramour to her husband, the wife all the while thinking the substance to be only a charm and having no knowledge of the poisonous nature of the substance administered till she did see the effects, held, that she was guilty only of an offence under s. 304 A. 60 P. R. 1897 Cr. Where the accused struck the deceased on the head while he was standing on the edge of a well, by which the deceased lost his balances and was drowned, held, that he was guilty of an offence under s. 304 A, as he did not cause death by doing an act with the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause death. 33 P. R. 1889 Cr. When during a quarrel between the complainant and the accused's father the accused struck a blow with a stick on the complainant, but fell upon a child of two years, which the complainant had on his hip during the quarrel, thereby causing the child's death, held that although the blow, if it had hit the complainant, could not have been likely to cause more than simple hurt, the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 304 A, under the circumstances of the case. 28 P. R. 1888 Cr. Section 304 A. I. P. Code must be read along with ss. 336, 337 and 338 and all these sections are confined in their operation to acts done without any criminal intent, apart, from the rashness or negligence which is their essential ingredient. 16 A. L. J. 615. Where on a charge of murder the Sessions Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury in favour of the accused, it is open to him to convict the accused under s. 304 A, 25 Bom. L. R. 610. On a certain night the two appellants fought with each other, each using a knife. There were no other witnesses to the occurrence. Each appellant was convicted under s. 307 I. P. Code, on the evidence of his opponent and the corroborative evidence of the wounds caused to the opponent and the admissions of the appellant that he was himself wounded in the occurrence. Each appellant received five or six serious wounds and would have died if he had not received early medical attendance.

In each case the condition of the wounded man was so serious that his dying deposition was taken. Held that neither of the appellants could be legally convicted under s. 307 I. P. Code, but that they were both guilty under s. 326 I. P. Code. 2 Rang. 558. Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. 30 C. W. N. 66. Where the accused hit one of his companions in shooting a boar he cannot be said to have acted either negligently or rashly. 9 Lah. L. J. 482.

Criminal Negligence.—Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge arises, was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. 30 C. W. N. 66. Where owing to strong wind and rough water, a ferry-boat overturns and sinks resulting in loss of life, the lessees of the ferry cannot be convicted of an offence under s. 304 A, Penal Code, unless it is shown that the boat, although overcrowded was in an unseaworthy condition at the time of the occurrence. 16 Cr. L. J. 72=26 Ind. Cas. 664. Where death is caused by a negligent act, an offence under this section has not been committed inasmuch as there was no likelihood of the result following. 1 M. 224=1 Weir 325. Where a snake-charmer, exhibiting a cobra with unextracted fangs in public, placed it on the head or one in the crowd to display his own skill and with no intention of causing harm, whereupon the cobra, in being pushed off the spectator, bit him and caused his death, held that the snake-charmer was guilty of an offence under s. 304 and not merely under s. 304 A. of the Penal Code. 5 C. 351=1 C. L. R. 580. Where a girl of 17 years of age being tired by her husband's ill treatment attempted to commit suicide by jumping into a well and she had no consciousness that her child was on her neck and she jumped with the child and the child died of the jump though the girl survived. Held that she was guilty under s. 304 A. 27 Bom. The accused who was driving a motor-bus when coming across a stationary tramcar instead of proceeding straight drove the bus to the other side of the tram with the result that a boy was knocked down and killed. It appeared that the accused did not blow the horn while so crossing and that he accelerated the speed while in the act of crossing and immediately after. Held that the act of the driver in making the deviation was not such a rash act as would bring the case within section 304 A. I. P. Code. Held, however that the conduct of the accused in not blowing the horn and in accelerating the speed just when passing close to the tramcar amounted to culpable negligence and that he was liable to be convicted under s. 304 A. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the day of at caused the death of by doing a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide, namely, by and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 304 A of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court).

and I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

305. If any person under eighteen years of age, any insane person, any delirious person, any idiot, or any person in a state of intoxication, commits suicide, whoever abets the commission of such suicide, shall be punished with death or transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—Insanity, idiocy, or deliriousness of a person takes away the criminality of the suicide. Bishop. Cr. Law Vol. II p. 377. But a person who abets the commission of suicide of such persons is guilty of an offence which is equal in magnitude to murder. A person abets the doing of a thing, who intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing, (section 107). "It seems to us" say the Law Commissioners "that the rule would fail to be applied under these clauses chiefly in such a case as this, where a person legally bound to take care of the person of another has by an illegal omission of his duty intentionally given him the opportunity, or permitted him to obtain the means of killing himself. It would apply also, we conceive, in the case of a person seeing another to destroy himself, say by hanging, and allowing him to accomplish his purpose without any attempt to prevent him, if as may be expected, the law of procedure makes it a common duty incumbent upon all men to assist in preventing offences about to be committed in their presence. The intention here would be inferable from the circumstances. In the former case collateral proof of the intention would be requisite. But we apprehend that it is active aid which is principally intended in these clauses, and to which the higher penalty is meant to be applied." First Report, §§ 322, 323. "Upon a charge of abetting suicide, under section 305, it will be incumbent on the prosecution, in addition to the ordinary evidence of abetment by instigating or aiding etc., to show to the satisfaction of the Court the incapacity, whether it arises from infancy, or insanity, or intoxication of the person who has committed suicide,—in the same manner as incapacity has to be proved by the accused when, upon an ordinary trial, it is relied on by way of defence."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc), hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at abetted the commission of suicide by A. B. a person under eighteen years of age (or an insane person, etc.) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 305 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said Charge.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable--Not-Compound-able—Triable by Court of Session.

306. If any person commits suicide, whoever abets the commission of such suicide, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—"This and the preceding section contain express provisions for the punishment of abetting suicide when that offence is actually committed. The ordinary law of abetment is inapplicable here. Suicide or self-murder may be the act of a person who is by law incapable of committing an offence (see sections 82, 83); or it may be committed by a person who is criminally responsible for his actions. In the former case section 305 makes the abetment of suicide an offence which may be punished as severely as murder.—Morgan and Macpherson. Actively assisting a Hindu widow to become a Sati is an offence under this section. 36 A 26=11 A. L. J. 997; see also 148 Ind Cas. 880=1931 A. L. J. 7=34 Cr. L. J. 1069=A. I. R. 1933 All. 160. According to English Law, a suicide is a felony, and not, a misdemeanour, so if it is committed in the adviser's absence, the latter at the common law goes free of punishment; because the principal, being dead cannot be first convicted. Reg v. Ledington, 9 Car. & P. 79; Reg v. Jessop, 16 Cox. C. C. 204; Bishop's Cr. Law P. 876. But when one advises another to kill himself, and he does it in the presence of the adviser, the latter becomes guilty of murder, probably as principal of the second degree but at all events as principal. Ibid. Accused were charged under sections 149 and 306 with being members of an unlawful assembly whose common object was to abet the suicide of a woman and with abetting the woman's suicide. It was found that they induced her to get her burnt along with the body of her deceased husband. With that object, they made her sit on the pyre with the husband on her lap and instantly a fire broke out from her hand. She tried to escape and leapt in the adjoining river wherefrom she was rescued by the police but she died ultimately. The accused foiled the attempts of the police to save her at an earlier stage. Held that the accused were guilty and the method of destruction resolved on for the suicide was fire and the method of ignition of the fire whether miraculous, whether self-applied or whether applied by others is totally immaterial. 9 Pat. L. T. 683=112 Ind. Cas. 363=29 Cr. L. J. 1035=A. L. R. 1928 Pat. 497.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—That on or about the day of at one A. B. committed suicide and that you abetted its commission by (state in what way), and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 306 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

307. Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances, that if he, by that act, Attempt to murder. caused death, he would be guilty of murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if, hurt is caused to any person by such act, the offender shall be liable either to transportation for life, or to such punishment as is hereinbefore mentioned.

*When any person offending under this section is under sentence of transportation for life, he may, if hurt is caused be Attempts by life convicts. punished with death.

Illustrations.

(a) A shoots at Z with intention to kill him, under such circumstances that, if death ensued, A would be guilty of murder. A is liable to punishment under this section.

(b) A, with the intention of causing the death of a child of tender years, exposes it in a desert place. A has committed the offence defined by his section, though the death of the child does not ensue.

(c) A, intending to murder Z buys a gun and loads it. A has not yet committed the offence. A fires the gun at Z. He has committed the offence defined in this section, and, if by such firing he wounds Z., he is liable to the punishment provided by the latter part of the first paragraph,† of this section.

(d) A, intending to murder Z by poison, purchases poison, and mixes the same with food which remains in A's keep; A has not yet committed the offence, in this section. A places the food on Z's table, or delivers it to Z's servant to place it on Z's table. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Legislative Changes.—The clause marked* has been added by Act 27 of 1870 s. 11 and the words marked† have been inserted by Act 12 of 1891.

Attempt to murder.—The accused, with the deliberate intention of causing the death of his father-in-law, gave him three blows on the head. He fell down senseless on the ground. The accused, thinking that he was dead, put under his head a bundle of fire wood, and set fire to the hut in which he was lying, with the intention of removing all evidence of crime. The medical evidence in the case showed that the injury caused by blows would have caused death if the hut had not been set fire to and that the burning caused the death. Held, that the accused was not guilty of murder, because, when he set fire to the hut he thought that his father-in-law was dead, and his object in setting fire to the hut was apparently to remove evidence of the crime, and not to make the deceased's death certain. He was therefore guilty of an attempt to commit murder under s. 307 I. P. Code. 15 B. 194. A culprit who inflicts 20 incised wounds on the body on a person most of which were aimed at his head must be charged with murderous intent and the sentence of transportation for life is not excessive. 13 P. W. R. 1915 Cr.=132 P. L. R. 1915. The accused, in the course of a quarrel with her sister-in-law and in a fit of anger, flung her child, three years old, into a pond four feet deep, on the edge of which her house was situated, and at the same time gave expression to wish that the death of the child should rest as a curse on the woman with whom she was quarrelling; Held, that the circumstances gave rise to a presumption that the intention of the accused was to cause death of the child, and that she was therefore, guilty of an offence under s. 307, although the child was picked up by a stander-by without loss of time. 5 Ind. Cas. 138=11 Cr. L. J. 48. A person intentionally discharging a loaded gun at another from a short distance inflicting injuries which might have proved fatal, is guilty of an offence under s. 307, Penal Code, and not merely of causing grievous hurt. 16 Cr. L. J. 542=29 Ind. Cas. 670.

The prisoner in this case threw two bricks, described as large, at a jailor, one of which struck him in the shoulder. Held that the facts did not justify a conviction for attempt to murder. A. W. N. 1881, 172. Where the appellant was proved to have put something found subsequently to be poisonous by the Chemical Examiner, into the food prepared for the prosecutor's family, and there was no evidence as to the quantity of the poison found in the food or as to the probable effects on any one who might have eaten it, held that the accused must have intended to cause hurt and was guilty of offences under ss. 328 and 511. 5 L. B. R. 79=3 Ind. Cas. 721=10 Cr. L. J. 363; but see A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 108=3 L. L. J. 191=22 Cr. L. J. 194=60 Ind. Cas. 50.

Scope.—To support a conviction under this section, it must be proved that the accused intended by his act to cause death and also that the act was one capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of things, although death did not eventually ensue. 1 Weir 328; 32 P. L. R. 1911=12 Cr. L. J. 125=9 Ind. Cas. 731; see also A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 281. If a person who has an evil intent does an act which is the least possible act that he could do towards the accomplishment of a particular crime that he has in his mind, he is not entitled to plead in his aid an obstacle intervening not known to himself. 14 A. 31. This section is exhaustive. 14 A. 38. "The intention or knowledge which is necessary to constitute murder may exist, combined with an act which falls short of the complete commission of that offence. The murderer may do an act towards the commission of the murder, but may involuntarily fail or be intercepted or prevented from consummating the crime. This and the following section seem to apply (as the illustrations show) to attempt to murder, in which there has been not merely a commencement of an execution of the purpose, but something little short of a complete execution, the consummation being hindered, by circumstances independent of the will of the author. The act or omission, although it does not cause death, is carried to such a length as at the time of carrying it to that length, the offender considers sufficient to cause death. Whether the act causes hurt or not is material only with reference to the degree of punishment which the section authorises. There may be many atrocious and deliberate attempts to murder falling within the provisions, which not only cause no hurt, but which are not even trespasses or assaults.—Morgan and Macpherson. The intention must be gathered from the nature of the act, manner and object proclaimed. Where complainant was beaten to unconsciousness conviction under section 307 is justified. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 67=29 Cr. L. J. 1008=112 Ind. Cas. 224; see also 125 Ind. Cas. 183=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 253; A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 491=126 Ind. Cas. 573. This section applies where the act is done with sufficiently guilty intention and knowledge that death would occur but death does not occur owing to something which is beyond the accused's control. A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 279=56 B. 434=33 Cr. L. J. 613=34 Bom. L. R. 571=138 Ind. Cas. 503.

Where on the evidence, the act of the accused amounts to an attempt to commit murder, the Magistrate should commit the accused to the Sessions Court for trial and should not try the case himself. 5 M. L. T. 25=4 Ind. Cas. 114=11 Cr. L. J. 196. A person firing two shots successively at another person clearly shows murderous intent. 11 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.=5 Ind. Cas. 602=11 Cr. L. J. 171. An offence under this section does not depend at all on the nature of the hurt actually inflicted. It is an offence which may be committed without inflicting any hurt at all, as will be clear from the first illustration to the section. 4 L. B. R. 311 (F. B.)=9 Cr. L. J. 11. Where in a case under this section, A and B were named as assailants at the Thana and when the Police reached the spot the name of C was substituted instead of B, and the only eye-witness said their backs were seen. Held, that the accused could not be convicted on account of these being blood stains on the clothes and on the evidence of the trackers which is by no means infallible. 14 P. W. R. 1913 Cr.=67 P. L. R. 1913=19 Ind. Cas. 196=14 Cr. L. J. 196.

The act which is punishable under s. 307 I. P. Code must be an act which is itself capable of causing death. Where a person pulled the trigger twice and aimed the gun at a certain person but with no result in the absence of proof that the gun was loaded, a conviction under s. 307 I. P. Code cannot be had. 2 Bur. L. J. 76=1923 Rang. 251=24 Cr. L. J. 850=74 Ind. Cas. 1042. Where appellant, a sower pursued deceased whom he thought to be the person wanted at the police station and fired three shots and the deceased who was standing in the river at the time of the third shot never appeared again. Held, there is no sufficient evidence to support the conviction. 1923 Lah. 415. Act must by itself be capable of causing death in natural or ordinary course of events. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 63; see also 31 P. L. R. 1004. Important consideration under s. 307 is intention or knowledge of accused and circumstances under which offence is committed. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 253. Where in a dark night the accused was proved to have fired a revolver in order to keep guard and it appeared that the shot was aimed at any one in particular. Held, that the accused was not liable to be convicted under s. 307 I. Where there was no evidence except disappearance of the deceased and three shots by accused, he could not be convicted under s. 307 unless he could have had knowledge or intention to cause death in a charge under s. 302. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 415=25 Cr. L. J. 308=76 Ind. Cas. 1028. Where two persons fought almost to their death and one of them laid a complaint, conviction of the other under s. 307 was not right as if death had ensued, accused would have been entitled to benefit of exception 4 to s. 300. A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 133=26 Cr. R. J. 409=84 Ind. Cas. 1049. Where an accused was charged under section 307 and the trying Magistrate, in convicting him, relied on the fact that some abrasions were found in his person. Held, that unless an incriminating circumstance is proved by the prosecution to exist against an accused person he should not be called upon to explain away its existence. A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 350=1929 Cr. C. 673.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ did an act, namely _____, with such intention (or knowledge), and under such circumstances, that if by that act you had caused the death of A and B you would have been guilty of murder under s. 302 (and that you caused hurt to the said A. B by the said act) and thereby committed an offence under s. 307 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct you to be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

308. Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge, and under such circumstances, that, if, he, by that act, Attempt to commit culpable homicide. caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both; and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Illustration.

A, on grave and sudden provocation, fires a pistol at Z under such circumstances that, if he thereby caused death he would be guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—Similar attempts may be made to commit culpable homicide in any of the mitigated forms which prevent that offence from amounting to murder. Here as in the preceding section, the attempt must be carried to the point of completion, so far as the criminal is concerned; but the complete effect is frustrated by accident or otherwise—Morgan and Macpherson.

Sentence.—Where the offender acted with malice aforethought full penalty allotted by law should be imposed. 141 Ind. Cas. 392=34 Cr. R. L. J. 147=1932 Cr. C. 810=26 S. L. R. 302=A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 207.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—As in section 307. supra.

309. Whoever attempts to commit suicide, and does any act towards, the commission of such offence, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, "or with fine, or with both."

Principle.—The same principle which forbids one to take the life of another prohibits equally the taking of his own life. Therefore suicide like any other felonious homicide is a common law felony. Bishop Cr. Law § 1187. In New York as in this country, an actual suicide is no offence, but it is a felony punishable by imprisonment to attempt it unsuccessfully. Ibid. The only punishment which can be inflicted for actual suicide is to forfeit the property of the deceased, but in that case no punishment is inflicted on the guilty but on this innocent heirs. According to the Laws of England, an attempt to commit felo-de-se is not an attempt to commit murder within the Stat. 24 & 25 Vict. C. 100, s. 15 but is a misdemeanour at common law. R. v. Burgess, 32 L. J. M. C. 55. The question for the jury is whether the accused did intend to take his own life, and it is a material factor to determine whether the accused really meant, to kill himself. R. v. Doody, 6 Cox. 463. A lenient sentence should be given where on account of ill-treatment the woman jumped into a well. 26 P. L. R. 581.

Scope.—Any act which is a part execution of the criminal design, is sufficient to constitute abetment under this section. But the act is a beginning of the act of self-murder, or such an approach to it as manifestly shows that there is a present intention to commit the crime.—Morgan and Macpherson. A deaf and a dumb person may be guilty under this section. 25 Bom. L. R. 43. If accused attempts to commit suicide but causes death of child undelivered, she is not guilty under section 307. 20 Cr. L. J. 395=17 A. L. J. 478=50 Ind. Cas. 1003. The law confers on the Court a very wide discretion in the matter of punishment under this section. 35 P. L. R. 439=1934 Cr. C. 805=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 514.

Legislative changes.—The words within quotations have been substituted by Act 8 of 1882, s. 7.

Suicide.—The offence itself is not punishable when completed because the offender has gone out of the jurisdiction of all Courts here on earth. The attempt is only made punishable.

Cases.—For cases vide, 14 Bom. L. R. 146 ; 8 M. 5 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 188 ; I. B. H. C. 4 ; 22 P. R. 1878 Cr ; 20 Cr. L. J. 395.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Non-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at attempted to commit suicide and did an act namely towards the commission of such offence and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 309 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

310. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall have been habitually associated with any other or others for the purpose of committing robbery or child-stealing by means of or accompanied with, murder, is a thug.

Notes.—Act XXX of 1836, made it an offence punishable with imprisonment for life with hard labour to have belonged to a gang of Thugs, either within or without the territories of the East India Company. This section explains what is a Thug. Gangs of persons habitually associated for the purpose of inveigling and murdering travellers or others in order to take their property etc., are so called.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Punishment.

311. Whoever is a thug shall be punished with transporation for life, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at were a thug and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 311 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Of the Causing of Miscarriage, of Injuries to unborn Children, of the Exposure of Infants, and of the Concealment of Birth.

312. Whoever voluntarily causes a woman with child miscarry, shall, if such miscarriage be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or both : and, if the woman be quick with child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A woman who causes herself to miscarry, is within the meaning of this section.

Miscarriage.—Miscarriage is the expulsion of the child or foetus from the mother's womb at any period of pregnancy before the term of gestation is completed. The offence defined in this section can only be committed where the woman is in fact pregnant. For although there may be a guilty intention and attempt to commit it on the person of a woman believed to be, but who really is not, pregnant,—the offence, as here defined seems to require that the woman should be with child—Morgan and Macpherson. The Indian Law Commissioners observe : "with respect to the law on the subject of abortion, we think it necessary to say only that we entertain strong apprehension that this, or any other law on that subject may, in this country, be abused to the vilest purposes. The charge of abortion is one which, even where it is not substantiated, often leaves a stain on the honour of families. The powers of bringing a false accusation of this description is, therefore, a formidable engine in the hands of unprincipled men. This part of the law will, unless great care be taken produce few convictions, but much misery and terror to respectable families and a large harvest of profit to the vilest pests of society. We trust that it may be in our power in the Code of Cr. Procedure to lay down rules which may prevent such an abuse. Should we not be able to do so we are inclined to think that it would be our duty to advise His Lordship in Council rather to suffer abortion, where the mother is a party to the offence, to remain wholly unpunished, than to repress it by provisions which would occasion more suffering to the innocent than to the guilty."

The term "miscarriage" is not defined in the Code. In its popular sense, it is synonymous with abortion, and consists in the expulsion of the embryo or foetus i. e. the immature product of conception. The stage to which pregnancy has advanced and the form which the ovum or embryo may have assumed are immaterial. This section requires proof that the woman is "with child" but it is enough if the fact of pregnancy and the intentional expulsion of the immature contents of the uterus are established. The words 'with child' mean pregnant, and it is not necessary to show that "quickening" i. e. preception by mother of the movement of the foetus has taken place, or that the embryo has assumed a foetal form. 9 M. 269=1 Weir. 331. A foetus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child, is a child within the meaning of s. 312. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 21. The offence defined in s. 312 can only be committed when a woman is in fact pregnant. 15 W. R. Cr. 4. Where a child was full grown a conviction under s. 312, Penal Code was set aside, and one under s. 511 for attempt to bring about miscarriage was maintained. 19 W. R. Cr. 32. Intention to commit crime alone, or intention followed by preparation is not sufficient to constitute attempt. Intention followed by preparation and any act towards commission of offence is sufficient to constitute attempt. 37 C. W. N. 1157=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 893.

If the woman be quick with child.—Quickening, is the name applied to the peculiar sensations experienced by a woman about the fourth or fifth month of pregnancy. The symptoms are popularly ascribed to the first perception of the movements of the foetus. But quickening is not a constant, uniform and well marked distinction of the pregnant state. The phrases "quick with child" is here used probably merely to denote an advanced stage.— Morgan and Macpherson.

Explanation.—According to the explanation a woman who causes herself to miscarry is within this section. But in awarding punishment, it will not be forgotten that the high caste young widow, who to hide her shame, may at the risk of life cause herself to miscarry, does not under the circumstances in which she is placed by the institutions of society commit an offence of like criminality with that of the seducer of young girl to married woman who to cover his offence causes such woman to miscarry.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at voluntarily caused one XY then being with a child to miscarry, such miscarriage not being caused by you in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the said XY, and thereby you committed an offence punishable under section 312 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge

313. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section

Causing miscarriage without without the consent of the woman, whether the woman is quick with child or not, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—As in section 312.

314. Whoever, with intent to cause the miscarriage of a woman with

Death caused by act done child, does any act which causes the death of such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and, if the act is done without the consent of the woman, shall be punished either with transportation for life, or with the punishment above mentioned.

Explanation.—It is not essential to this offence that the offender should know that the act is likely to cause death.

Notes.—"This species of homicide may be committed involuntarily that is, in the language of the Code, by a person who does not intend to cause, or think it likely that he will cause, death by the act which he does. If A intending only to cause miscarriage to Z, involuntarily does an act which causes her death, he is liable to punishment under this section and he is thus liable whether he acts with caution in order to prevent the risk to Z's life, or whether he acts rashly or negligently. Even if he takes such precautions and there is no reasonable probability that Z's death will be caused, and if the medicine is rendered deadly by some accident which no human sagacity could foresee, or by some peculiarity in Z's constitution, such as there was no ground whatever to expect, A will be liable to punishment under this section for causing death by an act done with intent to cause miscarriage. The consent of the woman freely and intelligently given, is allowed to mitigate the offence. If A kills Z by administering abortives to her with the knowledge that those abortives are likely to cause her death, he is guilty of culpable homicide, which will be culpable homicide by consent. if Z agreed to run the risk, and murder, if she did not so agree" — Morgan and Macpherson.

"This is an offence which can, it seems, be committed only where the woman is actually pregnant".—Ibid,

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable—by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you , on or about the day of at with intent to cause miscarriage of XY did a certain act namely, which caused the death of the said XY, and you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 314 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

315. Whoever, before the birth of any child, does any act with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive, or causing it to die after its birth, and does by such act prevent that child from being born alive, or causes it to die after its birth, shall, if such act be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—"The causing of the death of a child in the mother's womb and before any part of the child has been brought forth is not homicide. See section 299, Explanation 3,

"This section punishes offences directed against the life of an unborn child. Any act done with the intention here mentioned, which results in the destruction of the child's life, whether before or after its birth, is made punishable. Suppose a child's life is destroyed by potions, or bruises which it receives in the womb, it is immaterial whether the child is born alive or afterwards dies by reason of them, or whether they cause it to be born dead. The offence is one which will ordinarily be committed where the woman is in an advanced state of pregnancy. But the section is not expressly confined to causing the death of quick unborn children. The offence of causing miscarriage consists in procuring the expulsion of the child or foetus, by criminal violence or other means, from the mother's womb before the term of gestation is completed. The offence which the present section punishes is the injury to the child's life—the child may be born in proper time, or if born before due time, the miscarriage may happen by natural causes and not by criminal means.

"Acts done in good faith to save the mother's life are excepted. Cases of negligent treatment by doctors and others, where due care and attention have not been used, though not protected by this Exception, are not reached by the words of the section,—which apply only to acts done with the intention of destroying the child's life".—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session,

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you , on or about the day of did an act, to wit to XY before the birth of her child with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive (or causing it to die after its birth) and the said act was not done in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 315 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

316. Whoever does any act under such circumstances that if he thereby caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide, and does by such act cause the death of a quick unborn child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Illustration.

A. knowing that he is likely to cause the death of a pregnant woman, does an act which, if it caused the death of the woman, would amount to culpable homicide. The woman is injured but does not die ; but the death of an unborn quick child with which she is pregnant is thereby caused. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

Notes.—"This section punishes offences against children in the womb where the pregnancy has advanced beyond the stage of quickening, and where the death is caused after quickening and before the birth of the child. Any act or omission of such a nature and done under such circumstances as would amount to the offence of culpable homicide, if the sufferer were a living person, will, if done to a quick unborn child, whose death is caused by it, constitute the offence here punished. If a person strikes a pregnant woman and thereby causes the death of her quick unborn child he will be guilty of the offence here defined, if the blow was intended by him to cause the woman's death or was one which he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause it.

"The act done to the woman, if the death of her child is not thereby caused, will probably be punishable as an attempt to commit culpable homicide under the preceding sections.

"Cases of gross ignorance or rashness in the treatment of a pregnant woman will be punishable under this section, if in their circumstances they would amount to the offence of culpable homicide if the woman's death had been the result."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable— Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

317. Whoever, being the father or mother of a child under the age of twelve years, or having the care of such child, shall expose or leave such child in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation.—This section is not intended to prevent the trial of the offender for murder or culpable homicide, as the case may be, if the child die in consequence of the exposure.

Notes.—The offence consists in the desertion by the parent, or other person who has undertaken parental duties, of an infant or child of such tender age that it is not able to provide for and to take care of itself. This offence is complete notwithstanding that no actual danger or risk of danger arises to the child's life. Thus, suppose a mother leaves her illegitimate infant child at a hospital or at some place where it is certain the child will be seen or cared for,—she has committed this offence, if she intended to abandon the child. It is true that she has committed the offence under circumstances greatly mitigating it, as compared with a desertion on a barren heath or in an unfrequented place, where the consequence of desertion is great danger or risk of danger to life. The explanation shows that a desertion under such circumstances that death is the result of the exposure, may amount to murder or culpable homicide : and though the death of the child may not ensue, the offence may amount to an attempt punishable under section 307"—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where a woman immediately after giving birth to an illegitimate child and throwing it into a thorn bush, walked nearly a mile and a half, gave a false account of her condition to her companions, dispensed with any assistance even after she reached home, denied having given birth to a child when questioned by the head man next morning, and never asked after the child's welfare at any time or showed any solicitude on the subject : Held, that the woman was guilty of the offence under s. 317. U. B. R. 1914 1st Qr. 5 = 24 Ind. Cas. 837 = 15 Cr. L. J. 525. Where a woman abandoned her newly born child, but left it in a place which was quite close to the village and also near a public road, where in fact, the child was shortly discovered, held that the mother could not be rightly convicted of an attempt to murder, but should rather be convicted of the offence described in s. 317. A. W. N. 1903, 43. Under section 317, Penal Code, the only intention required to complete the offence is an intention of wholly abandoning the child. It is not necessary that there should be an intention to abandon the child so as to endanger its life. 1 Weir. 331. The manner of exposure or leaving and the consequences likely to ensue from it are not essential ingredients of the offence under the Indian law, though they may often be properly taken into consideration in estimating its gravity and apportioning the sentence. 24 M. 662=1 Weir. 332. The real object of s. 317, Penal Code, is the prevention of the abandonment or desertion by a parent of his or her children of tender years in such a manner that children not being able to take care of themselves may run the risk of dying or being injured. 15 W. R. Cr. 12. A mother would be liable to be punished under s. 317, and not under section 307, Penal Code, although she left her child in a place which was quite close to a village and also near a public road where it was, in fact, shortly after discovered. A. W. N. 1933, 43. A newly born child was left by its mother in an enclosure near a road not far from the village, was there discovered by a passer-by and shortly after breathed its last. Held, that the mother could not be convicted of murder, the child not having been left on a barren heath or in an unfrequented place, but of an offence under s. 317, Penal Code. 23 P. R. 1886 Cr.; see also 10 W. R. Cr. 52. But where a mother exposed an infant child, knowing that such abandonment by her was likely to cause its death, and death ensued in consequence thereof, held that she could properly be convicted of culpable homicide under s. 304 and not under both s. 304 and s. 317. 2 A. 349. Accused must be clearly shown to have intended to abandon the child completely. 21 Cr. L. J. 253 (Nag)=55 Ind. Cas. 205. Whoever has custody of the child other than the mother, is liable to conviction; and if mother handed it over with such purpose both are guilty under s. 317 and s. 109. 18 Bom. L. R. 934=18 Cr. L. J. 98=41 B. 152=37 Ind. Cas. 306. In case of offence under s. 317 by women of 18 who is not weak s. 562 Cr. Pro. Code should not be applied. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 48.

Being the father or mother.—Both are equally bound by ties of duty, and this equally whether the child be born in wedlock or be illegitimate. An infant requiring nurture, or a child of tender years, will ordinarily be in the immediate charge of the mother the father's duty being that of providing for both mother and offspring. The person who has the immediate care of the child is the person contemplated. A parent who is absent, but who has provided duly for the maintenance and protection of his child, would not be criminally answerable for its abandonment by the person in whose charge he had left it. The offence consists in the desertion of the child, by a person who is bound by nature to support and protect it, or who has taken on himself that duty, whether by adopting the child, or by way of contract with the parent, or in some other way.—Morgan and Macpherson. The mother of an illegitimate child, aged 6 months, made over the child to a blind woman in whose company she was, and promised to return with food which she said she was going to buy; she went off to another village and probably had no intention whatever of returning. Held that she was not guilty of an offence under s. 317. 18 A. 364=A. W. N. 1896, 117. A married woman, who eloped leaving her suckling baby a month and a half old in the house of her husband, was held not to be guilty of an offence under s. 317, Penal Code, as she knew that her husband would surely take care of it. 5 P. R. 1878 Cr. A married woman quarrelled with her husband and left for her parents' home when he had gone out, leaving her child six months old in his house. The husband took charge of the crying infant on his return home: held, that the woman was got guilty of an offence under s. 317, Penal Code. 4 P. R. 1879 Cr.

Shall expose or leave, etc.—Exposure or leaving the child with the intention of wholly abandoning it is an essential part of the offence.—Morgan and Macpherson. Upon the question of intention, the previous treatment, as well as the circumstances of the particular case, will throw light. Thus previous neglect or ill-treatment of the child may add to the probability of the exposure being with intent wholly to abandon it. In a time of famine, a child may be deserted, not because those who have the care of it intended wholly to abandon it, but from mere destitution and inability to support it. Ibid.

When a woman left her daughter's newly born babe with the sister of her son-in-law, who was then absent from the place, saying that it was her brother's child, and the infant died shortly after her departure, held that the woman was not guilty of an offence under s. 317 and that her daughter had not abetted any such offence. 33 P. R. 1872 Cr. An accused person who caused the death of her infant child by deliberately starving it, but did not either abandon or part with it, was held to have been wrongly convicted under s. 317, Penal Code and it was pointed out that the Sessions Judge, in convicting the mother under s. 304, ought to have specified the exception under s. 300, which covered the case. 18 P. R. 1870 Cr. Where the jury doubted whether a woman had abandoned her child at all, or whether she was the mother of it, although the Sessions Judge had no reasonable doubt from the evidence of these points, it was pointed out that it was his duty in summing up the evidence to lay before the Jury all the facts requiring to be determined by them. 1. W. R. Cr. Letters, 10. In a case which was one of abandonment of child, the circumstances which were revealed in evidence precluded the idea that appellant intended to do more than abandon her illegitimate child, and even this was done in a way to give the child every chance of being rescued. Held, that under such circumstances the finding and sentence of the Sessions Judge must be modified. 23 P. R. 1886 Cr.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, being the father (or mother or having the care) of a certain child under the age of twelve years, to wit of the age of years, did expose (or leave) the said child in a certain place, to wit with the intention of wholly abandoning it, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 317 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance or the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

And I direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

318. Whoever, by secretly burying, or otherwise disposing of the dead body of a child, whether such child die before or after, or during its birth, intentionally conceals, or endeavours to conceal, the birth of such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The offence under this section, cannot be committed unless the child had arrived at the stage of maturity, at the time of birth, and that it might have been a living child. 4 M. H. C. App. 33 ; 2 C. P. L. R. 153 ; 3 Cr. L. J. 432 ; 1 Bom. L. R. 155 ; 1 Weir, 333 ; 1 Weir, 334 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 721.

In order to constitute an offence under this section, there must be a secret burial or other disposal of the dead body. The disposal must clearly be ejusdem generis with the secret burial. The disposal need not necessarily be a final disposal. It is sufficient if the body be temporarily concealed with the intention of removing it elsewhere when opportunity occurs. 13 C. P. L. R. Cr. 188 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 961 ; 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 29. A necessary ingredient of this offence is intentional concealment. 8 C. P. L. R. Cr. 5 ; 1 N. L. R. 89. See also 26 P. W. R. 1913 ; 12 Ind. Cas. 650 ; 1 C. P. L. R. 163 Cr. ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 775 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 607.

"The concealment of the birth of a child is not in itself an offence, but only a circumstance of suspicion which may form part of the evidence of an offence. This circumstance the law has thought fit to enact by the definition of a substantive offence. Such enactments are justified by the facility with which the life of an infant at its birth is extinguished, and the temptation to take it away in cases of bastard children.

"The prosecutor must first establish, to the satisfaction of the Court, the fact of the birth of the child. And the secret of burying or other disposal of the dead body must be proved.

"Whether the father, mother or a stranger, does the act, regard must be had to the doer and the person who orders it to be done. Suppose the mother is passive, giving no directions, but another near her directs the burial or other disposal, it seems she cannot be punished. If there is no act of concealment or disposal of the body after the child is dead, the offence is not committed. A mere denial of its birth is not sufficient."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Conceals or endeavours to conceal birth, etc.—Not the concealment of the fact of pregnancy, or the death, but the birth i. e., the delivery of a child dead or living is made punishable by this section. There must be it seems, a disposal in some secret place, whether the place is intended only as a place of temporary deposit, or as a place of permanent deposit. Merely putting the body in an open exposed position, as on a bed, would not be such a place. But if it be put in a case, or under a bed, pillow, mattress etc. this will be a sufficient disposal—Morgan and Macpherson.

Of Hurt.

Hurt.

319. Whoever causes bodily pain, deesase, or infirmity to any person, is said to cause hurt.

Notes.—Many of the offences within this division, will also fall under the head of assault. A stab, a blow which fractures a limb, the flinging of boiling water over a person, are assaults, and are also acts which cause bodily hurt. But bodily hurt may be caused by many acts which are not assaults. A person, for example, who mixes a deleterious portion, and places it on the table of another; (Vide 21 A. L. J. 844); a person, who conceals a scythe in the grass on which another is in the habit of walking; a person, who digs a pit in a public path, intending that another may fall into it;—all these may cause serious hurt, and may be justly punished for causing such hurt. But they cannot, without extreme violence to language, be said to have committed assaults. All bodily hurts, not only those which are serious but also those which are slight, are within the provisions inserted under this division. But a distinction is made between "hurt" and "grievous hurt". It may not be possible to draw a line between the two, with perfect accuracy. But it is better that some such line should be drawn, though rudely, than that offences some of which approach in enormity to murder, while others are little more than frolics which a good natured man would hardly resent, should be classed together. The several penal provisions which are here made for these offences, are intended to mark by corresponding degress of punishment the different degrees of bodily injury caused. Still more they mark the mischievous intentions with which such injuries have been perpetrated. For it is the intention or knowledge with which the hurt is inflicted that must chiefly be regarded in the award of punishment. Where a wicked intention is shown to the satisfaction of the Judge, the severity of the hurt inflicted is not a circumstance which ought to be mainly considered in apportioning the punishment; though it is undoubtedly by a circumstance which is important as evidence when the intention is not clearly established, Morgan and Macpherson. An act which causes death unintentionally is tantamount to "hurt" vide, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 673; 3 C. 623; 18 W.R. Cr. 29 21 Bom. L.R. 1101; 162 P. L. R. 1913; 157 P. L. R. 1913; 2A. 522; 19A. 295; 2A. 776; 3A. 507. The pain caused by a blow across the chest with an umbrella was held not to be of such a trivial character as would come within the meaning of the Penal Code, s. 95, but to be hurt under s. 319. 24 W. R. Cr. 67. Where an infatuated young man administered dhatūra under the impression that it was a love philtre, there is no intention to cause hurt. The offence falls under s. 319 and not under s. 328. 21 A. L. J. 844=L. R. 4A. 229 Cr. A person can be convicted for grievous hurt only when the effect of the injuries inflicted by him actually lasts for 20 days but not when the sufferer dies before the period expired. 84 Ind. Cas. 438=26 Cr. L. J. 294=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 297. Where the accused dazed by a blow, kicked the prostrate man and pressed his head into ground he was guilty of simple hurt only. A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 282=5 O. W. N. 391=30 Cr. L. J. 173=113 Ind. Cas. 481.

320. The following kinds of hurt only are designated as "grievous:—"

First.—Emasculation.

Secondly.—Permanent privation of the sight of either eye.

Thirdly.—Permanent privation of the hearing of either ear.

Fourthly.—Privation of any member or joint.

Fifthly.—Destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of any member or joint.

Sixthly.—Permanent disfiguration of the head or face.

Seventhly.—Fracture or dislocation of a bone or tooth.

Elighthly.—Any hurt which endangers life, or which causes the sufferer to be, during the space of twenty days, in severe bodily pain, or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.

Hurt or grievous hurt.—In cases of hurt, it is for the Magistrate to classify and to come to a finding of his own, as to whether the hurt was grievous or simple and for this purpose, the Magistrate should examine the medical officer to ascertain whether the injuries are of any of the kinds specified in this section. It is not the business of the medical officer to decide whether a wound is grievous hurt or not, but to describe the fact from which the Magistrate will decide. 4 Cr. L. J. 202.

"Some hurts which are not like those kinds of hurts which are mentioned in the first seven classes, obviously distinguished from slight hurts, may nevertheless be most serious. Thus a wound may cause intense pain, prolonged disease, or lasting injury to the constitution, although it does not fall within any of these classes. Again a beating which does not maim the sufferer or break his bones, may be so cruel as to bring him to the point of death. It is clear that such hurts should be classed with those which are grievous, and not with hurts, all traces of which disappear in a few days. Accordingly the 8th clause provides for them. Three circumstances are mentioned in the clause, any one of which can make a hurt a grievous hurt of that kind, (1) if life is endangered by it, or (2) if severe bodily pain is caused for twenty days, or (3) if the sufferer is unable to follow his ordinary pursuits for that length of time. The length of time during which he is in pain or diseased, or incapacitated for pursuing his ordinary avocations, though a defective criterion of the severity of the hurt is the best that can be devised. And it is one which may be employed, not merely in cases where violence has been used, but in cases where hurt has been caused without any assault, as by the administration of drugs, the placing of ropes across a road, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson. 321. Whoever does any act with the intention of thereby causing hurt to any person, or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person, and does thereby cause hurt to any person, is said "voluntarily to cause hurt."

Scope.—"Both the extent of the hurt and the intention of the offender must be considered. His intention may, in this, as in all other cases, usually be inferred from the act which he has done. It should be observed that the definition now under consideration will include a case in which a person, intending to cause hurt to A, or knowing it to be likely that he will cause such hurt unintentionally, hurt B."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Intention.—The intention or knowledge of the accused can only be inferred from the nature and extent of the injury. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 316. This offence is caused when the blow is intended for another. 2 C. L. R. 304.

322. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt, if the hurt which he intends to cause or knows himself to be likely to cause, is grievous hurt, and if the hurt which he causes is grievous hurt, is said "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt".

Explanation.—A person is not said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt except when he both causes grievous hurt and intends or knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. But he is said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt if, intending or knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt of one kind, he actually causes grievous hurt of another kind.

Illustration.

A intending or knowing himself to be likely, permanently to disfigure Z's face, gives Z, a blow which does not permanently disfigure Z's face but which causes Z to suffer severe bodily pain for the space of twenty days. A has voluntarily caused grievous hurt.

Scope.—The provisions of this section are very precise and incapable of misconstruction. A magistrate dealing with a charge under this section must decide and consider not only whether grievous hurt has been caused, but, if it has been caused, whether the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. If he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause simple hurt only, he cannot be convicted under s. 325. 28 Ind. Cas. 1907. "It is requisite not only that the hurt itself should be grievous, but also that the offender should intend or know himself to be likely to cause a grievous hurt. A man who means only to inflict a slight hurt may, without intending or expecting to do so, cause a hurt which is exceedingly serious. A push which to a man in health is a trifle may, if it happens to be directed against a diseased part of an infirm person, occasion consequences which the offender never contemplated as possible. A blow designed to inflict only pain for a moment, may cause the person struck to lose his footing, to fall from a considerable height and to break a limb. But it would be unjust to punish the offenders in such cases for results which could not reasonably be expected or intended to follow their acts. But if grievous hurt of any kind was contemplated, it is immaterial (as the explanation and illustration show) whether the hurt caused is the hurt contemplated, provided only it is grievous. The result and the intention must to this extent correspond.

"The offender's intention may be reasonably proved from his acts. But now, it may be asked, are we to discover what degree of hurt the offender "knows himself to be likely to cause"? It is not necessary that there should be any hurt of which it could with truth be said, this and this alone is the degree of hurt which the offender knew himself to be likely to cause. A person who ties a rope across a road by night, may know himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt, even though he thinks it on the whole more probable that he will only cause hurt not grievous. He may contemplate both at the same time. The duty of the Judge in such a case will be, not to seek for direct proof of the precise degree of hurt which the offender thought himself likely to cause, but to draw a conclusion from the nature of the act and the evidence generally as to whether, among other consequences, grievous hurt might not reasonably have been thought likely to ensue from it. If the fair conclusion at which he arrives is that nothing more than simple hurt was probably to be anticipated, then although grievous hurt may unexpectedly have ensued, it will be his duty to convict the offender of causing simple hurt only."—Morgan and Macpherson.

The Law Commissioners say: "We agree with Mr. Bacon what we conceive to be his meaning as to the duty of the Judge, that is to say that he is not to trouble himself with seeking for direct proof of what the offender thought was likely to happen, but is to infer it from the nature of his act, taking him to have intended grievous hurt, or at least to have contemplated grievous hurt as likely to occur, when he did what everybody knows is likely to cause grievous hurt, and the more certainly drawing this conclusion where there is evidence of previous enmity against the party who has suffered. If the act was such that nothing more than simple hurt could reasonably be thought likely to ensue from it, then although grievous hurt may unexpectedly have ensued, it would be his duty to convict the offender of simple hurt only.....judging that grievous hurt was not in his contemplation; for according to clause 317 (=this section) a person can be convicted of grievous hurt only when the result and the intention correspond, or when grievous hurt has been suffered from an act which was intended to cause grievous hurt, though it may be of a different kind." First Report s. 377.

Cases.—Where B, the accused was much enraged at being turned out of the shop whither he had gone for drink, and intended to revenge himself on the man who turned him out, and where B hit that man over the head with a stick hard enough to fracture his skull. Held that, in the circumstances, B must be presumed to have intended either to cause grievous hurt or known that he was likely to cause it, within the meaning of this section. U. B. R. 1911, 4th Cr., 105=15 Ind. Cas. 311=13 Cr. L. J. 471. Where a person intends to inflict injury upon one person, but actually inflicts injury upon another, his act constitutes the offence of hurt or grievous hurt, within the meaning of s. 321 or 322 of the Penal Code, according to circumstances. 3 C. 623=2 C. L. R. 304. The provisions of s. 322, Penal Code, are very precise and incapable of misconstruction. A Magistrate or Court dealing with a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt must consider and decide not only whether grievous hurt has been caused, but, if it has been caused, whether the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. If he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause simple hurt only, he cannot be convicted under s. 325. U. B. R. (1914), 4th Qr. 35=28 Ind. Cas. 1007=16 Cr. L. J. 431.

323. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished, Punishment for voluntarily causing hurt. with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Notes.—A criminal prosecution under this section does not abate by reason of the death of the person injured. 81 Ind. Cas. 719.

The intention or knowledge of the accused can only be inferred from the nature and extent of the injury. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 316. A bailiff can also call upon the decree-holder to help him in removing the judgment-debtor, and the decree-holder cannot be prosecuted under this section for helping the bailiff. 5 Bom. L. R. 977. The charge under section 323 should distinctly deny the existence of circumstances constituting a special exception, as the terms of s. 237 of the Cr. Pro. The act on which an accused person must be punished under s. 323 is the hurt which he intended to cause or might be reasonably held likely to cause, by the act done, and not an unfortunate and an entirely unforeseen result of that act. 11 P. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, _____ on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ voluntarily caused hurt to A. B _____ and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 323 of the Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

324. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 334, voluntarily causes hurt by means of any instrument

Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means. _____ for shooting, stabbing, or cutting, or any instrument which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, or by means of fire or any heated substance, or by means of any poison or any corrosive substance, or by means of any explosive substance or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, to swallow, or to receive into the blood, or by means of any animal, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

An instrument etc.—The expression “an instrument, which used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death,” in this section should be construed with reference to the nature of the instrument, and not the manner of its use. U. B. R. (1897-1901), Vol. I. 311. In a case under this section the charge should follow the wording of the section. U. B. R. (1897-1901), V. I. 318.

Section 334.—This section applies to the case of a person who causes hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation. 1 B. H. C. R. 17.

Object.—The object of this section is to make a simple hurt more grave and liable to more severe punishment. 7 M. H. C. App. II. “The means used to inflict the hurt indicate great malignity. A blow with the fist may give as much pain and cause as lasting injury as cutting with a knife or branding with a hot iron. But in most cases, the offender who has used a knife or a hot iron is a far worse and more dangerous member of society than he who has only used his fist. The hurt actually inflicted may not, according to the classification of hurts, be a grievous hurt. Yet, on account of the mode in which it is inflicted, it deserves to be punished more severely than many grievous hurts. The administering deleterious or stupefying drugs with the view to commit an offence is made punishable by a subsequent section (vide section 328). The mere administering any such deleterious thing, where the object or intention is not apparent, may be an offence within this section.—Morgan and Macpherson. Causing hurt on grave and sudden provocation is not an offence under this section. 1 B. H. C. R. 17. But a charge and finding in case of causing hurt under this section, need not contain a negation that the hurt was caused on grave and sudden provocation. 4 M. H. C. R. Ap. 5. Husbands have no right whatever to chastise their wives, even with small canes or bamboos. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 421. A husband, causing hurt to his wife in order to constrain her to obey a demand of his to return to his house, will not be guilty of an offence under s. 330, which, apparently, refers to some demand in respect of property. In this case, as the husband slightly cut his wife with an instrument of stabbing or cutting, it was held that he was guilty under s. 324, Penal Code. 11 M. 257=1 Weir. 336. An accused can not be convicted under this section where a charge of affray has been framed against him. 4 L. B. R. 237=7 Cr. L. J. 498. Code can be sentenced only under one or the other of the two sections. 35 P. L. R. 587=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 614.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable.—When permission is given by Court—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—Same as in section 323, only after A. B. add the name of the instrument with which the hurt is caused.

325. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Number of accused.—Where a number of accused intended to beat the complainant but grievous hurt was inflicted. Held, that it must be proved, before any one could be convicted under this section that the common object was the intention to cause grievous hurt or the knowledge that any one of them might be likely to cause grievous hurt in the course of the beating which they intended to give to the complainant. 15 Cr. L. J. 192; 5 W. R. Cr. 12; 6 P. R. 1901 Cr; 83 Ind. Cas. 589; 1923 Lah. 35.

Scope.—To establish an offence under this section, it is necessary to prove that the grievous hurt, as described in s. 320, has been caused by the accused and was caused voluntarily. 12 W. R. Cr. 25; 21 P. R. 1889 Cr; 23 W. R. Cr. 65. A disability for 20 days constitutes grievous hurt. 1 W. R. Cr. 9. When there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but "voluntarily causing" grievous hurt. 2 W. R. Cr. 39; 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 41; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 558; 12 Ind. Cas. 296=12 Cr. L. J. 528=(1911) 2 M. W. N. 1888.

When one man takes away the life of another, he should prove circumstances, if any, justifying his doing so. Even if the act is done in exercise of the right of private defence, it lies upon him to show that he did not exceed that right. 8 C. W. N. 714=1 Cr. L. J. 708. The right of private defence cannot be successfully invoked by men who voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting with their enemies for the sake of fighting, as opposed to the case where men are reluctantly forced to use violence in order to protect themselves from violence offered to them. 17 Bom. L. R. 888=3 Bom. Cr. C. 100. Where a person has sexual intercourse with a girl of little over twelve years of age, with her consent and thereby causes grievous hurt to her, he commits an offence under section 325 I. P. Code, and is not protected by s. 80 or s. 88 of the same Code. 12 C. P. L. R. Cr. 11; see also 18 C. 49. On a finding that the accused charged with murder had no intention of killing the deceased or perhaps of badly injuring him, held that the accused could not be convicted of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder and that, as there was not present in the mind of the accused any thing more than a knowledge that he was likely to cause a grievous hurt, the accused was guilty only of an offence under s. 325. 18 P. R. 1893, Cr.; see also 18 C. W. N. 1279=15 Cr. L. J. 709=26 Ind. Cas. 157; A. W. N. 1892, 105; 30 A. 568=A. W. N. 1908, 243=4 M. L. T. 402=8 Cr. L. J. 383; U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 293; Rat. Un. Where in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention to cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the proper conviction would be for voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery and not for voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery. 6 W. R. Cr. 16. The conviction of an accused person, who emasculated himself under s. 309, Penal Code was held to be illegal and that he could not be convicted of causing grievous hurt to himself under s. 325. 22 P. R. 1878 Cr. Where for the purpose of facilitating robbery, dhatara was administered by two persons to certain travellers in consequence of which one of the travellers died and others were made seriously ill, it was held that, in respect of the traveller who died, the offence committed was that punishable under s. 335 of the Code. An accused person charged with the offence of grievous hurt should be committed for trial to the Sessions Court. 1 B. H. C. 101. The mere fact that the accused who has been convicted of grievous hurt, is a man of bad character would not justify an enhanced punishment. 49 P. R. 1873 Cr. When the accused persons were charged under s. 325 I. P. Code read with s. 149 and the charge under section 149 fails they cannot be convicted under s. 325 alone. 16 C. W. N. 1077=15 Ind. Where the accused gave a blow to the deceased which caused his death, without any intention to kill, or to inflict bodily injury likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that the death must be the probable result, he was neither guilty of murder nor of an offence under s. 304 A, but was merely guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. 3 A. 776=A. W. N. 1881, 132=6 Ind. Jur. 264. Where the conviction is for causing grievous hurt, the record must show under which of the categories of "grievous hurt" specified in s. 320 Penal Code, the offence falls. 1 W. R. Cr. Letters, 5. When accused persons are acquitted of rioting, they cannot be properly convicted of grievous hurt under s. 325, by the application of s. 149 of the Penal Code, when it is not found that those persons, or any one of them were members of an unlawful assembly. 27 C. 566=4 C. A resistance to the execution of an illegal warrant does not render persons liable to conviction under s. 147, but when the right of resistance is exceeded and a severe injury, not called for, is inflicted, the person who inflicts such injury may be convicted under s. 325. 29 C. 244=6 C. W. N. 164. Where the accused armed with sticks (the size of which is not known) gave blows, which fell on the temple of the deceased in consequence of which he died four days after, it must be inferred that the accused did not intend to cause death but only grievous hurt, and a conviction for this offence only can be sustained. A poor old sweeper went out towards the latter part of the night and was taking cowdung cakes belonging to the accused's master when the accused fell on him with a dang beating him severely on the head and arms, whereby the arms were disabled completely. There was no evidence whatever that the accused had any intention of killing the sweeper. Held, that the accused could not be convicted under s. 308 but was guilty of an offence under s. 325. 102 Ind. Where in a trial of the accused for offences under the Penal Code, ss. 147 and 325, the Court sanctions the compromise of the charge under s. 352, the prosecution for the offence under s. 149 does not ipso facto fail. If in such a case the circumstance require it, the Court can discharge the accused in respect of the charge under s. 147. 26 P. L. R. 35=86 Ind. Cas. 62=29 Cr. L. J. 686=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 474. Where a joint attack was made by two men armed with Jatrees on another who died of the injuries received. Held, that there can be no doubt that there was a common intention to cause grievous hurt or that at least they knew it was likely that grievous hurt would be caused, and that the accused were guilty under s. 325, though in the absence of clear proofs as to who caused the fatal injury neither of them could be convicted under s. 304. 7 Lah. Where there were 3 persons on the side of the appellants and only two on the side of the deceased, who accidentally received injuries on the head it was not clear from whom and subsequently died, the presumption is that the appellants were the first to attack and were not acting in self-defence. They committed an offence under s. 325 and not under s. 304. 3 Lah. L. 589=67 Ind. Cas. 817=23 Cr. L. J. 465. An offence under s. 325, Penal Code, is compoundable with the permission of the Court, but the only person who can compound is the man who is hurt. Where, therefore, the man who is hurt dies of the injury, the case cannot be compounded by the heirs of the deceased. 13 A. L. J. 630=37 A. 419=16 Cr. L. J. 586=30 Ind. Cas. 138. The right of private defence cannot be successfully invoked by men who voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting with their enemies for the sake of fighting as opposed to the case where men are reluctantly forced to use violence in order to protect themselves from violence offered to them. 17 Bom. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable, when permission is given by Court—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

That you on or about the day of at voluntarily caused grievous hurt to A. B. and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Sessions or High Court).

And I hereby direct you to be tried on the said charge by the said Court.

326. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt by means of any

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt by dangerous weapons or means. instrument for shooting, stabbing, or cutting, or any instrument which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, or by means of fire or any heated substance, or by means of any poison or any corrosive substance, or by means of any explosive substance, or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, to swallow, or to receive into the blood, or by means of any animal, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The section can only apply to a person who does a substantive act himself, and inflicts a blow which causes grievous hurt as defined in the Code. 6 C. W. N. 98.

The crime mentioned in the section requires severe repression, and where grievous hurt is caused it usually calls for a heavy sentence. Where some aggravating circumstance exists to which the law attaches a severe punishment, such as the use of a deadly weapon, it is the duty of the court to ascertain the aggravating circumstance and not to assume jurisdiction by ignoring it, and then by passing a sentence for a minor offence, defeat the plain intention of the Law. L. B. R. (1872-1891), 182; See also, 20 P. R. 1915 Cr. Sections 325 and 326 like the two sections immediately preceding provide the ordinary punishment, and punishment under certain aggravating circumstances, of the offences mentioned—the two latter sections applying to the case of causing "grievous hurt," and the two others to the case of "hurt." Many acts made punishable under the preceding provisions may approach closely in character to those deliberate attempts to commit culpable homicide which are punished by sections 307 and 308. Such attempts, when hurt is caused by them, are distinguishable from the offences here punished,—because in the former, the act done is intended or known to be likely to cause death: whereas nothing more than hurt or grievous hurt is contemplated in cases falling under the present sections. But it may happen that the same act and the same circumstances which satisfy the Court that hurt or grievous hurt has been voluntarily caused, are equally cogent to show that the intention of the accused was to cause death. Morgan and Macpherson. A person urged another to attack the complainant, and such other person cut the complainant in the fore-arm with a clasp knife, while the former threw sticks at him. It appeared from the evidence that there was no proof that the latter had the knife in his hand at the time of the former's urging him on, nor was there evidence that the former knew in any other way that the latter would be likely to use the clasp knife. Held, that the former could not be convicted of abetting the offence of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon under s. 326, Penal Code, but that he would only be convicted of abetting an assault. 4 L. B. R. 271=8 Cr. L. J. 472. Where a person caused grievous hurt by means of chhavi in excess of his right of private defence he can be convicted under this section. 29 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=182 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 540=24 Ind. Cas. 948. Where the accused in the course of a quarrel, stabbed the opponent in four places out of which he died, held, that in the absence of any evidence to show the character of the wounds inflicted, and whether death was the probable result of the wounds, the accused could not be convicted of culpable homicide, but should have been convicted of voluntarily causing grievous hurt with dangerous weapon. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 463. A person cutting his wife's nose and ears with a razor and her gut with a pair of scissors, is guilty of the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt with an instrument of cutting and the offence is not therefore, compoundable. 19 P. R. 1902 Cr. To constitute an offence under s. 326 of the Penal Code, the act must have been done "voluntarily." That is the very essence of the offence. 12 C. W. N. 530=7 Cr. L. J. 362. Before a conviction for the offence of grievous hurt can be passed, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 must be strictly proved; and the eighth clause is no exceptions to the general rule of the law that a penal statute must be construed strictly. 19 B. 247. Where the accused struck two blows, one of them severe and the other slight on the head of the deceased, and the deceased died in consequence, held, that it was safer and sounder to convict the accused under s. 326 than under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code. 115 Ind. Cas. 66=30 Cr. L. J. 378=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 37. Where the accused shot the deceased at his thigh and the latter died after ailing for two months and it appeared that he would not have died but for an attack of dysentery, held, that the accused was liable to be convicted under s. 326 and not under s. 300. 11 Lah. In a prosecution for an offence under s. 326, I. P. Code, a lenient sentence should be inflicted where the eye-witness did not profess to see the beginning of the fight and consequently it is impossible to say whether any provocation was given and to what extent. 30 P. L. R. 582.

Where a person was charged under ss. 326 and 149, he can be convicted under s. 326 read with s. 34 where it was proved that the accused being present and armed with a deadly weapon gave an order to other persons armed with deadly weapons to assault the complainant. 113 Ind. Where the Court had been able to make up his mind definitely about the actual persons who caused the injuries sustained by the complainants and there was delay in making their complaint a conviction can not be sustained. 1923 Lah. 447. The accused were charged with offence under s. 326 read along with s. 149. They were acquitted on the latter charge as the alleged motive was not convincing and the common object was not made out. Held, this does not prevent a conviction being bad under s. 326 I. P. C. if grievous hurt was caused. 74 Ind. Cas. 717=24 Cr. L. J. 813. Where accused were charged separately with having entered complainant's house and cut off his ears and removed his ear-rings and there was no specification of a common intention to inflict grievous hurt; held, that as the identification of the person who inflicted the grievous injury was not made out, and as there was an absence of common intent, the conviction under s. 326 was bad, for which must be substituted convictions under s. 323. 47 Ind. Cas. 445=19 Cr. L. J. 929. Where an accused was found guilty of having cut off his wife's nose by a razor he should be convicted under s. 326. 20 P. R. 1915 Cr.=39 P. W. R. 1915 Cr. Where deceased struck on hand with thakwa died of septicæmia long after wound was inflicted and after keeping normal temperature and the injury by itself could not be called dangerous to life. In this case the offence was held to fall under s. 326 and not under s. 304. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 103. Wound on neck with sharp-edged weapon is dangerous to life, but it is not sufficient in itself to cause death. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 305. Fact that quarrel during which deceased gets fatal wound is sudden and arises in heat of passion is mitigating circumstance in favour of accused. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 311. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 216=24 Cr. L. J. 401=72 Ind. Cas. 513.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—The same as in section 325, only after A. B. add the name of the instrument with details.

327. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt for the purpose of extorting from Voluntarily causing hurt to the sufferer, or from any person interested in the extort property, or to constrain sufferer, any property or valuable security, or of to an illegal act. constraining the sufferer or any person interested in such sufferers, to do anything which is illegal, or which may facilitate the commission of an offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The bodily hurt is inflicted by way of torture. The execrable cruelties which are committed in India by robbers, dacoits etc., for the purpose of extorting property, or information relating to property, render a severe punishment necessary. The section applies not only to such cases, but to all cases in which the hurt is for purpose of extorting, or compelling against the sufferer's consent, the delivery of property, notwithstanding that the offender may have a valid claim or title to such property.—Morgan and Macpherson. Torture by means of stinging rattles, the effect of which was to extort property, is an offence under this section. 18 W. R. Cr. 8.

Person interested in the sufferer.—Any tie of blood relationship, marriage, service, or even friendship, seems sufficient. The Court must ascertain for what purpose the suffering was caused, whether it was directed wholly at the sufferer or at another through him. Besides the purposes above referred to, of extorting property or information relating to property, another purpose may be to constrain to any illegal act. Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Separate conviction.—It is doubtful whether separate convictions under s. 147 and this section are legal. 8 C. L. R. 390.

328. Whoever administers to, or causes to be taken by, any person Causing hurt by means of any poison or any stupefying, intoxicating, or poison, &c. with intent to unwholesome drug, or other thing, with intent to commit an offence. cause hurt to such person, or with intent to commit or to facilitate the commission of an offence or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—In order to convict a person of an offence under this section mere administration of the drug will not do. There must also be evidence to show that such administration was with the intent specified in the section and to cause injury to the person to whom it was administered. 15 Cr. L. J. 512 : 25 Cr. L. J. 517 ; 46 A. 27 ; 4 Bom. L. R. 425 ; 1 Weir, 335 ; 30 A. 568 ; A. I. R. 1931 Pat 346 = 32 Cr. L. J. 1228 = 134 Ind. Cas. 639 ; 60 Ind. Cas. 50 = 22 Cr. L. J. 194 = 3 L. L. J. 191. "This offence is complete although no hurt is caused to the person to whom the poison or drug is administered. It is sufficient if he is induced to take it by a person who has any such intention as is specified in the section or who knows that it is likely to cause hurt. A person who knowingly cause another to take poison, may be presumed without further proof to intend to cause hurt unless he is able to show satisfactorily a good intention, e. g., that it was administered in good faith medicinally. Stupefying, intoxicating, or unwholesome drugs or liquors may often be given and taken by those who know their qualities, or who have no intention to cause hurt or to commit an offence by means of them. Where such things are administered, the criminal intention, which is an essential portion of the offence here defined, should be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Court. The sale of intoxicating or unwholesome liquor or drugs by persons who know their qualities, and that they are likely to cause hurt, is not, it seems, an offence falling under this section."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Hurt.—In order to constitute an offence under the section it is not necessary that the hurt should be caused to any particular person intended or that the person injured or likely to be injured should have been previously known. 5 B. H. C. Cr. 50 ; 5 L. B. R. 79. The accused called in a "medicine man" to detect a case of theft. The latter told the accused that he could administer the juice of some leaves to all the villagers, and that it would cause the belly of the thief to swell. The medicine man mixed some drug with the juice in the presence of the accused, and those who took the medicine really submitted themselves to the ordeal. Three of them showed symptoms of having been poisoned and suffered severely for upwards of a fortnight. Held, the accused had committed an offence under s. 328, for having caused an unwholesome drug likely to cause hurt to be administered. 1 Weir 335. The words "or other thing" in s. 328 of the Penal Code must be referred to the preceding words and be taken to mean "unwholesome" or "other thing" and not other thing simply. 1 W. R. Cr. 7. The offence of administering deleterious drugs, when life was not endangered, is punishable under s. 328, Penal Code, and not as for grievous hurt under s. 326. 4 W. R. Cr. 4.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Elements.—There must be connection between the assault and restoration of property. 5 Pat. L. W. 109. It must be proved that the assault was inflicted for the purpose of extorting confession or restoration of property. 46 Ind. Cas. 525=5 Pat. L. W. 109=19 Cr. L. J. 749; 13 W. R. 23 Cr; 138 Ind. Where the accused was shown to have tacitly instigated the commission of an offence by others by expressing approval of their conduct in maltreating a tenant and by suggesting that the tenants having lost their heads they should be given a sound beating. Held, that the accused was rightly convicted and sentenced under s. 330 read with s. 114 I. P. Code. 25 A. L. J. 149=8 L. R. 28 Cr.=100 Ind. Cas. 537=28 Cr. L. J. 313.

Cases.—Where a police constable, in the course of an enquiry, violently beat the deceased who died of the beating nine days subsequently, held that he was guilty of an offence under s. 330 I. P. Code. 86 P. R. 1866. An Excise Inspector searching the house of a person, under the suspicion that he would find cocaine there, committed many irregularities. He had no warrant authorising him to make the search, he had brought only one search witness and he directed a constable to scale the outer wall of house. The accused assaulted and beat him. Held that the Inspector and the constables was not acting in the discharge of their duties as public servants and the accused were not guilty of an offence under s. 330, Penal Code, but was guilty of causing hurt only. 13 A. L. J. 439=37A. 358=16 Cr. L. J. 495=29 Ind. Cas. 335.

Sentence.—In this case the accused, a sergeant of Police, was convicted under s. 330 I. P. Code, and sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment for causing hurt to a prisoner in his custody for the purpose of extorting a confession. On revision, the sentence was enhanced to rigorous imprisonment for two years, for the reason that the offence found to have been committed was of the gravest character, and such as to shake judicial confidence in a most important portion of the evidence, which has commonly to be relied on by the Courts of Justice, namely, the genuineness and trustworthiness of early confessions, for such evidence ought to be free from the slightest taint, and to tamper with it is to pollute justice at the fount. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 320.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

331. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer, or any person interested in the sufferer any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer to restore, or to cause the restoration of any property or valuable security or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The hurt or grievous hurt in these sections is supposed to be committed by way of torture, but for purposes differing from those mentioned in the two preceding sections. The illustrations show the operation of these provisions. The information sought for may be required for the advancement of justice—nay more, it may be such information as cannot be withheld without offending against public justice—the property, the extortion of which is sought, may be property which the sufferer has borrowed from the offender, and which he illegally refuses to give back—the claim or demand may be a just claim—but the law will not tolerate the employment of such means as are here made punishable, even when used for honest ends. Morgan and Macpherson. Here the word "demand" must be with respect to property; consequently the extortion of a promise to restore an abducted woman is not an offence under this section. 5 Lah. L. J. 374=73 Ind. Cas. 272=24 Cr. L. J. 576=1924 Lah. 167. Torture by police-officer for getting confession which causes death is an offence under this section. 40 Ind. Cas. 710.

332. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt to any person being a public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant, or with intent to prevent or deter that person or any other public servant from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Where a constable was employed to watch the accused, and the accused knew of it when he assaulted him. Held, that the constable was not doing anything in excess of his authority at the time of the assault, and the accused was rightly convicted under s. 332, I. Under s. 54, Criminal Procedure Code, a police-officer investigating a charge of burglary (a cognizable case) is empowered to arrest, without an order from a Magistrate or a warrant, persons against whom a reasonable suspicion of having been concerned in the burglary existed, and so the persons assaulting the police-officer while arresting them

An accused person while under trial struck a Sub-Inspector of Police, who was in the witness-box giving evidence against him. Held, that the offence of which the accused was guilty in this respect was rather that provided for by s. 355 of the Penal Code, than that punishable under s. 332 of the Code. A. W. N. 1907 186=6 Cr. L. J. 22. The words "in discharge of his duty" mean that the officer has a duty to discharge and is discharging it at the particular time. servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant, or with intent to prevent or deter that person or any other public servant from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Under s. 333 a person who causes grievous hurt to a public servant can be convicted under three circumstances (1) when grievous hurt is caused while the public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant; in this case motive and object are irrelevant. (2) when a public servant is prevented or deterred from discharging his duty as such public servant in this case it is necessary that the object of the accused should be to deter the public servant from discharging his duty but it is not necessary to prove any motive; (3) when the public servant is assaulted in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that public servant in the discharge of his duty; in this case it is necessary that the public servant should be discharging his duty at the time of assault. The object too is irrelevant. The only thing that has got to be seen is motive. A. I. R. 1935 All. 563. The offence contemplated by section 332 and section 333 consists in causing hurt or grievous hurt to a public servant in the lawful discharge of his duty, or in order to deter him from it, or in consequence of it, vide 18 S. He is under the same protection of the law while proceeding to the place, while remaining there, and while returning from it. Morgan and Macpherson. The protection which the law affords to these public servants is not, it seems, confined to them, but extends to persons acting in good faith by his directions. Ibid; 19 M. 349; 21 M. 296; but see 38 A. 14=13 A. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

334. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt on grave and sudden provocation, if he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause hurt to any person other than the person who gave the provocation, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Scope.—The punishment is mitigated because the hurt is caused on grave and sudden provocation. Causing grievous hurt on grave and sudden provocation is punishable more severely than causing hurt not grievous on such provocation. The provisions on this subject are framed on the same principles on which the corresponding portion of the law of culpable homicide has been framed. Morgan and Macpherson. This section applies to the case of a person who causes hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation. 1 B.H.C.R. 17; see also 27 Ind. Cas. 559=16 Cr. L. J. 175; 94 Ind. Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

335. Whoever "voluntarily" causes grievous hurt on grave, and sudden provocation, if he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt to any person other than the person who gave the provocation shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to four years, or with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—The last two sections are subject to the same provisos as exception 1, section 300.

Notes.—The accused was convicted of causing grievous hurt (viz. the cutting of nose) to his wife under grave and sudden provocation, and was sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for four months. On reference to the Sessions Judge for enhancement of sentence: Held enhancing the sentence to one of two years rigorous imprisonment, that the particular act of which the accused was found guilty was one which imported deliberate design. 17 Bom. Legislative changes.—The word within quotations has been added by Act 8 of 1882.

Compoundable.—Only grievous hurt coming under this section and section 338 is compoundable. S. C. 74. Oudh.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

336. Whoever does any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred and fifty rupees, or with both.

Scope.—Hitherto cases in which hurt has been voluntarily caused have been provided for. But hurt may be caused involuntarily yet culpably. There may have been no design to cause hurt, no expectation that hurt would be caused. Yet there may have been a want of due care not to cause hurt. For these cases of the involuntary, yet culpable, infliction of bodily hurt, and also for the like cases of causing, risk of hurt, this and the following sections are provided. Morgan and Macpherson. Many specific acts of rashness or negligence likely to endanger life or to cause hurt or injury, are made punishable by chapter XIV. This section punishes similar acts, of whatever kind, which cause risk to human life or to the personal safety of others, although no hurt may have been caused thereby. Morgan and Macpherson. For the conviction of an offence under this section, the fact that human life or the personal safety of others was endangered must be proved. It is not merely a question of the words "rashly or negligently." 1 L. B. R. 45.

Rashly.—A rash act is primarily an overhasty act and is thus opposed to a deliberate act but it also includes an act which though it may be said to be deliberate, is yet done without due deliberation and caution. L. B. R. (1893—1900), 426. An act which is in itself unlawful is neither rash nor negligent. U. B. R. 1905, Penal Code, 15=2 Cr. L. J. 475.

This section applies to acts which are in themselves lawful but which are done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life etc. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 595. This section applies to illegal acts also. 140 Ind. Cas. 99=33 Cr. L. J. 889=1932 Cr. C. 291=1932 A. L. J. 224=A. I. R. 1932 All. 322. This section is meant to deal with cases of rashness or negligence in doing a lawful act, but not when the act is criminal in itself. Sel. Case No. 31 of 1887. The imputability of culpable rashness arises from acting despite the consciousness that mischievous consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not, and often with the belief that sufficient precautions have been taken to prevent their happening. In re George Loveday, 1 Weir, 337. The only questions in a case under s. 336, Penal Code, are (1) whether the act done is a rash and negligent act, and (2) whether it was such as was likely to endanger life. In re Thippana Reddi, 1 Weir 337. The provisions of the above sections are intended to meet cases where acts which are in themselves lawful are done so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 91. Section 336 is not appropriate for the punishment of a person deliberately throwing stone at a house. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 595; A. I. R. 1928 All. 745.

In order to convict a person under the above section, the prosecution must prove rashness or negligence on the part of the accused, and also that by such rashness or negligence human life or the personal safety of others was actually endangered. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 9. A village headman having a license to conduct swing during the charak pujan in his village was charged under s. 336 for allowing a person to swing by hooks inserted in the flesh, instead of by being attached to the swinging apparatus by cloths. Held, that the headman was not guilty under s. 336, Penal Code. 5 C. W. N. 376. Doing an act endangering human life or the safety of others, is an offence under this section. 18 C. W. N. 1176=27 Ind. Cas. 195=16 Cr. L. J. 131. An offence under s. 336 is not one of those which may be lawfully compounded. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol I. 219. Where the accused threw brick-bats, at the back of, the complainant's house, which had hit it and fallen to the ground, and there was no evidence to show that human life or personal safety of any body was endangered by the accused's acts. 5 L. B. R. 100=4 Ind. Cas. 293=10 Cr. L. J. 552. The case of and accident to a motor-car due to the negligent and reckless driving of another motor car ought to be tried within a week. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 776=1929 Cr. 520. Where during the occurrence of communal riots the accused threw brickbats from his roof on passers-by and fired 2 shots from his gun and no one was hurt by the bricks or the gunshots and he was convicted under s. 336, held, that the accused committed no offence. 23 A. L. J. 356=87 Ind. Cas. 523=47 A. 606=26 Cr. L. J. 987=A. I. R. 1925 All. 396; see also A. I. R. 1928 All. 745=51 A. 465=112 Ind. Cas. 592=1929 A. L. J. 175. Where a taxi-driver was licensed to drive wearing spectacles on account of his defective eye-sight, he cannot be convicted under this section for driving without spectacles. 42 B. 396=20 Bom. L. R. 376=45 Ind. Cas. 506=19 Cr. L. J. 695.

Procedure.—Cognizable.—Summons.—Bailable.—Not-Compoundable.—Triable by any Magistrate.

337. Whoever causes hurt to any person by doing any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life, or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees or with both.

Scope.—This section applies only to acts done without any criminal intent. Personal injury intentionally caused is neither a rash nor a negligent act. U. B. R.

Where an operation was needlessly made by a physician in a primitive way without taking the most ordinary precautions and where the instruments used were not disinfected and sterilized and where the result was that the operation was unsuccessful and the complainant's eye-sight was permanently damaged to a certain extent held that the accused's physician was rightly convicted under this section. 39 B. 523=17 Bom. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

338. Whoever causes grievous hurt to any person by doing any act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life, or the personal safety of others, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Notes.—Causing death of a child wife by having sexual intercourse with her is an offence under this section. 18 C. 49. For other cases under this section, vide 16 Ind. Cas. 511=18 Cr. L. Of wrongful restraint, and wrongful confinement.

Scope.—The provisions under this head are for the punishment of offences, in which the offender, although he may have no design against human life, and no intention to inflict bodily hurt, either wholly deprives the injured person of his freedom, or in some degree abridges his personal liberty. The personal restraint or confinement may, in some cases, be so slight as to deserve little more than a nominal punishment, but the arbitrary imprisonment of a person, which is often a quiet and convenient mode of prosecuting him, is a most serious offence, deserving of exemplary punishment. Morgan and Macpherson.

339. Whoever voluntarily obstructs any person so as to prevent that person, from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed, is said wrongfully to restrain that person.

Exception.—The obstruction of a private way overland or water, which a person, in good faith, believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence within the meaning of this section.

Illustration.

A obstructs a path along which Z has a right to pass. A not believing in good faith that he has a right to stop the path. Z is thereby prevented from passing. A wrongfully restrains Z.

Scope.—This section relates to the voluntary obstruction by a person, and not obviously, at least, to obstructions, which are not voluntarily continued by the persons accused of the obstruction, throughout the time this obstruction lasts. 9 Bom. L. R. 30 : 36 M. 547. Restraining a horse on which a person is riding so as to prevent him from proceeding at the moment of wrongful restraint amounts to wrongful restraint within the meaning of s. 339 of the Penal Code. 100 Ind. Cas. 544 = 28 Cr. L. J. 320 = A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 506. Ss. 339 and 341 do not cover cases where there is no ordinary or special reason for a person to proceed in the direction which is obstructed. 29 Bom. L. R. 494 = A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 369. No doubt there is authority for the view that all that section 339 protects is the obstruction of any person and that it does not cover a case where he himself is free to proceed in a direction in which he has a right to proceed but without any impediments that he may have with him. On the other hand this view of personal obstruction must obviously have some limits. 27 Bom. L. R. 1419. Obstructing a person going with bullocks to a place where he had a right to go is an offence under s. 339. A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 118 = 27 Bom. L. R. 1419 = 27 Cr. L. J. 139 = 91 Ind. Cas. 811. Obstruction to a person having a right to go upwards is an offence. But projecting a shed over a well not obstructing any person is no offence. A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 369 = 29 Bom. L. R. 494 = 28 Cr. L. J. 1023 = 100 Ind. Cas. 544. Voluntary obstruction of vehicle is not wrongful restraint. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 252.

Under this section the obstruction should be so complete and successful as to prevent the person obstructed from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed. 15 Bom. L. R. 103. Physical presence of the obstructor is not necessary as an ingredient of the offence of wrongful restraint. To constitute the offence, the obstructor must intend or know or have reason to believe it to be likely that the means adopted would cause the obstruction of the complainant. 9 M. L. T. 103. There must be obstruction attributable directly to the person charged. 5 M. L. T. 207. An obstruction made by a person who acts in good faith in the supposed exercise of any right is not an offence. And it is not apparent why the exception appended to the definition is confined to the case of obstructing a private way. The obstruction must be voluntary; that is, the act or the illegal omission which causes it must be intended or known to be likely to obstruct. If there is this intention or knowledge, it is not necessary that there should be actual obstruction by physical means, by some act done, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson. This obstruction must be against a person. 15 Bom. L. R. 103; but see 10 W. R. 35. The obstruction must be a physical obstruction. 1 Weir 339. The mere ploughing up of a path does not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of s. 339. 2 L. W. 1035. A person will not be justified in complaining of wrongful restraint against a pariah, who being lawfully in the public street on his own business, refused to move when directed to remove himself to a distance, knowing that, if he remained, the complainant would be debarred, by fear of pollution, from passing near him. So where A caused certain pariah to stand in the public street in the vicinity of a temple, with the object of preventing B from conducting a procession from the temple through the street, held, the act of A did not amount to an obstruction within the meaning of s. 339, and it was B's disinclination to go near the pariahs, and not presence of the pariahs, which prevented him from going where he would, and that A did not therefore commit the offence of wrongful restraint. 7 M. L. T. 366=15 Ind. Cas. 851=11 Cr. L. J. 263. No offence of wrongful restraint is committed where the complainant is detained by the moral influence. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 89. A police officer refusing to let a person go home until he had given bail would be guilty of wrongful restraint. 10 W. R. Cr. 10. The act of preventing a person from proceeding in a certain direction, with his carts and exacting from him a sum of money on a false plea would constitute an offence of wrongful restraint. 10 W. R. Cr. 35. The accused landlord prevented a tenant of his who was holding over, from entering the room which the tenant had rented from the accused. Held that the accused has committed an offence under s. 339 I. P. Code. 43 Bom. 531=21 Bom. L. R. 261=20 Cr. L. J. 417. To justify a conviction for an offence under s. 341 I. P. Code, it must be found that the person complaining has a right to proceed along the path and that he was obstructed from doing so. 2 L. W. 1035=16 Cr. L. J. 701=30 Ind. Cas. 749.

Exception.—Where the accused believed that they had a right to prevent the complainant from passing over their ground, and erected a wall between their premises in good faith, held that their case was covered by the exception. 2 P. R. 1886, Cr.; see also 30 C. W. N. 921, 24 C. 885; 47 C. 818; 15 Cr. L. J. 532; 12 B. 377; 5 P. W. R. 1914; 34 M. 547; 16 Cr. L. J. 701.

340. Whoever wrongfully restrains any person in such a manner as to prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits, is said “wrongfully to confine” that person.

Illustrations.

(a) A causes Z to go within a walled space, and locks Z in. Z is thus prevented from proceeding in any direction beyond the circumscribing line of wall. A wrongfully confines Z.

(b) A places men with fire-arms at the outlets of a building, and tells Z that they will fire at Z if Z attempts to leave the building. A wrongfully confines Z.

What constitutes.—The use of physical force is not a necessary ingredient of the offence of wrongful confinement. The mere detention of a person at a police station by moral force, exercised by the police or other persons guarding him, would be sufficient to constitute the offence. 1 Weir. 341; 4 Bom. L. R. 79. A person may be guilty of wrongful confinement though he acts without malice. 13 B. 376. Confinement of a prisoner already undergoing imprisonment in a cell within the jail for the purpose of administering enema, against his will, and without legal authority, amounts to wrongful confinement. 30 C. 95=6 C. W. N. 511. Illegal arrest and custody fall within this section. 1 Weir. 338; 1 Weir. 341. A I. R. 1923 All 34=26 Cr. L. J. 428=85 Ind. Cas. 44. There can be no wrongful confinement when a desire to proceed has never existed, nor can a confinement be wrongful if it was consented to by the person affected. 36 P. R. 1894, Cr. As regards wrongful confinement for the purpose of extortion vide 27 C. 925=4 C. W. N. 755. Where the landlord prevents his tenant from entering his house he is guilty under this section. 43 B. 531; see also 42 B. 141=20 Bom. L. R. 79. Confinement by reason of mistake of fact is not an offence under this section. 47 C. 818.

341. Whoever wrongfully restrains any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees or with both.

Essentials of an offence.—To justify a conviction, for an offence under this section, it must be found that the person complaining has a right to proceed along the path and that he was obstructed from doing so. 2 L. W. 1035. The slightest unlawful obstruction to the liberty of the subject to go when and where he likes to go provided he does so in a lawful manner, cannot be justified, and is punishable as an offence under this section. 1 Weir 339. Mere direction or demonstration will not constitute wrongful restraint. 4 M. L. T. 141; 1 Weir 339. “The offence of wrongful restraint, which consists in the keeping a man out of place where he wishes to be and has a right to be, when it does not amount to wrongful confinement and when it is not accompanied with violence or with the causing of bodily hurt, is seldom a serious offence. It is therefore visited with light punishment." Morgan and Macpherson. Unreasonable delay on the part of a Plague passport officer to issue a passport, to a person who cannot lawfully proceed to another place, though highly reprehensible, cannot amount to wrongful restraint or imprisonment of such person, in the absence of anything to show that the officer objected to such person going on without a passport, or that he, either physically or by the show or suggestion of force prevented such person from proceeding. 2 M. L. T. 159=5 Cr. L. J. 357. If a watchman prevents an intending immigrant from leaving the Emigration Depot, he commits an offence under this section. 21 M. L. J. 439=10 Ind. Cas. 107=12 Cr. L. J. 212=1911, 1 M. W. N. 369. Voluntary obstructions to any person from entering upon the land under bona fide colour of title and possession is not such an obstruction as can be made the subject of a criminal prosecution under s. 341 of the I. P. Code. 5 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=34 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 533=24 Ind. Cas. 844. Mere obstruction to carts and bullocks passing by a particular road, without interfering with the free passage of persons by the same, does not amount to an offence of using criminal force under s. 341 I. P. Code. 2 L. W. 185=1915 M. W. N. 203=16 Cr. L. J. 176=20 Ind. Cas. 560. Addressing a respectable gentleman in the singular is not an offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 933. Offence can be compounded before filing a complaint. A. I. R. 1927 All. 375=25 A. L. J. 396=28 Cr. L. J. 495=49 A. 484=131 Ind. Cas. 671. A conviction under s. 341 is bad where there was no physical restraint of complainant's person. 19 Cr. L. J. 445=44 Ind. Cas. 973. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try an offence summarily under s. 342 nor can he create a jurisdiction charging for the lesser offence under s. 341. 1932 M. W. N. 478.

A person cannot be convicted of wrongful restraint where he locks up a house under a bona fide claim to the same. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 451=Cr. Rg. 10 of 1889. Where a Civil Court peon in executing a warrant of arrest against a judgment-debtor, stopped a palki with closed doors coming out of the male apartments of the judgment debtor's hoes, believing that the judgment-debtor was making his escape thereby, and a purdanashin lady of rank was in the palki, held, that having regard to the terms of s. 79, the peon could not be convicted under s. 341 of the Code. 24 C. 885=1 C. W. N. 655. A person preventing his neighbours from building a party-wall within their back yards not guilty of wrongful restraint within the meaning of s. 341. 1 Weir 339. An accused had not committed an offence within the definition of this section, where he has not prevented a person from proceeding in any direction in which that person had a right to proceed. 1 Weir 340. Removing a ladder and thereby detaining a person on the roof is an offence under this section. 1 Weir 340. Where the accused came up and ordered the complainant not to remove certain things he was removing from a shop to another, and overturned the cart with the things, and the complainant went to the other shop leaving the things laying in the road, held the accused would not be convicted under s. 341 of the Penal Code, but that an offence under s. 425 had been established. 12 C. 55. Where a person accused of wrongful restraint by erection of a fence over a way contended that he had acted in accordance with a decree of a Civil Court, held, that a Magistrate should confine his attention to observing or enforcing the terms of the decree of Civil Courts without obtaining evidence to modify or question it. 5 C. W. N. 215. Mere excessive and mistaken exercise of powers not civilly excusable in a police officer, would not amount to the offence of wrongful restraint. 24 W. R. Cr. 51. The complainants in this case charged six accused persons with the offence of wrongful restraint, in as much as they had restrained the complainants from passing through certain fields on the way to their well. Held that the accused cannot be convicted of an offence under s. 341, I. P. Code because complainants' right of way is not sufficiently established. 22 P. R. 1910 Cr.=120 P. L. R. 1900=7 Ind. Cas. 493=11 Cr. L. J. 495. Where a person obstructed his co-owner from using a mot to which he had yoked his bullocks on the slope to a well which existed for that purpose on the ground that he had not paid his share of expenses on the well, held that he was guilty of the offence of wrongful restraint under s. 341 I. P. Code as his co-owner had a right to use the mot. 27 Bom. L. R. 1419.

A private citizen has a right to arrest or put under restraint a person who is not only threatening to commit a breach of the peace; but is a danger to the other villagers. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

342. Whoever wrongfully confines any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Scope.—"This section punishes the offence defined by section 340. Wrongful confinement, which is a form of wrongful restraint, is the keeping a man within limits out of which he wishes to go, and has a right to go. It may, like wrongful restraint, be a slight offence. But when attended by aggravating circumstances it may be one of the most serious that can be committed."—Morgan and Macpherson.

In the present state of the Indian Law, an arresting officer, who confines a judgment-debtor in the decree-holder's house, whilst waiting to produce him before the Court on its reopening after a holiday, is not guilty of wrongful confinement. 30 M. 179=16 M. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

343. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for three days or more, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—One aggravating circumstance in this offence of wrongful confinement is the duration of the confinement. Confinement for a quarter of an hour may possibly be a mere frolic, deserving only a nominal punishment. It may indeed be so harmless as not to amount to an offence. But the like confinement if continued for a length of time may come to be a very serious offence—Morgan and Macpherson. The confinement must be against the person's wishes. Vide 1923 Lah. 274=5 L. L. J. 38. Where the prisoner was sentenced for abetment of abduction of a woman under ss. 109 and 498, Penal Code, and for wrongful confinement of her under s. 343, held, that both the sentences were illegal as the essence of the case was abduction, and that the accused, as abettor therein should be sentenced for it alone. W. R. 1864, Cr. 21. Accused No. 1 brought a woman who was his kept mistress from Kolhapur and kept her with accused No. 2, a brothel house-keeper in Bombay. On previous occasions too he had supplied women to accused No. 2 to be used as prostitutes. The woman was made to live as a prostitute in the house the entrance to which was guarded ; and watch was kept over her movements. Occasionally she was allowed to go out under surveillance. Held, that both accused were guilty of wrongly confining the woman. 42 B. 181=20 Bom. L. R. 79=44 Ind. Cas. 114=19 Cr. L. J. 258.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of Court—Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

344. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for ten days or more, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Chaining an insane brother for a period of nearly three months is an offence under this section. 47 A. 475=21 A. L. J. 391.

Sentences.—The sentence should include imprisonment. 1 B. H. C. 39.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

345. Whoever keeps any person in wrongful confinement, knowing that a writ for the liberation of that person has been duly issued, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, in addition to any term of imprisonment to which he may be liable under any other section of this chapter.

Notes.—This is another circumstance of aggravation. The offender persists in wrongfully confining a person notwithstanding an order issued by a competent authority for the liberation, or for the production of such person.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

346. Whoever wrongfully confines any person in such manner as to indicate an intention that the confinement of such person may not be known to any person interested in the person so confined, or to any public servant, or that the place of such confinement may not be known to or discovered by any such person or public servant as herein before mentioned, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable for such wrongful confinement.

Scope.—To render a person liable, under this section, it must be shown that the wrongful confinement was of such a nature as to indicate an intention that the person confined should not be discovered. 9 C. 221. No separate sentence is to be passed in cases of restraint in attempt to kidnap. 6 N. W. P. 293. The offence consists in wrongful confinement aggravated by the offender's endeavour to deprive his prisoner and those interested in him or bound to protect him, of the remedies which the law gives against this wrong. This intention of the offender is not expressly, made part of the definition.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable—by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

347. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for the purpose of extorting from the person confined, or from any person interested in the person confined, any property or valuable security or of constraining the person confined, or any person interested in such person, to do anything illegal, or to give any information which may facilitate the commission of an offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Where the charge was one under s. 347 of the Penal Code and the evidence of the prosecutor and other evidence had been taken, and the case postponed for the evidence of further witnesses which was considered necessary by the Magistrate, and they failed to appear, an order by the Magistrate dismissing the case for want of sufficient evidence was held to be legal. 7 B. L. R. 9. Where it was alleged that the police officer illegally detained a person with the object of extorting money but the Court found that no money passed, held that the elements of an offence under s. 347 were wanting. 7 O. W. N. 957=A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 505. Separate convictions under ss. 147 and 347 are legal. 140 Ind. Cas. 752=34 Cr. L. J. 81=13 P. L. T. 288=A. I. R. 1932 Pat. 335. Where a person by fear of injury was induced to place thumb mark on blank paper and such paper is valuable security a conviction under s. 347 is legal. Ibid.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

348. Whoever wrongfully confines any person for the purpose of extorting from the person confined, or any person interested in the person confined, any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence, or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the person confined or any person interested in the person confined, to restore or to cause the restoration of, any property or valuable security, or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Notes.—Where a village Magistrate was present at the beating and the wrongful confinement, by a police constable, of a person suspected of having committed theft and it was proved that the village Magistrate actually encouraged the ill-treatment by the constable, held, that he was guilty of abetting the offences punishable under ss. 333 and 348 Penal Code. 14 Wier, 50 ; see also 1930 M. W. N. 723.

Of Criminal Force and Assault.

Of Criminal Force and Assault.—A large proportion of acts designated as assaults, will also be offences falling under the heads of hurt and restraint. Thus a stab with a knife is an offence falling under the head of hurt, and it is also an assault. The seizing a man by the collar, and thus preventing him from proceeding on his way, is unlawful restraint, and is also an assault. But there will be many assaults which it is absolutely necessary to punish, yet which cause neither bodily hurt nor unlawful restraint. A man who impertinently puts his arm round a lady's waist, who aims a severe stroke at a person with a horse whip, who maliciously throws a stone at a person, squirts dirty water over him, or sets a dog at him, may cause no hurt and no restraint,—yet it is evident that such acts ought to be prevented—Morgan and Macpherson.

349. A person is said to use force to another if he causes motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact, with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contacts affects that other's sense of feeling.

Provided that the person causing the motion or change of motion, or cessation of motion, causes that motion, change of motion, cessation of motion, in one of the three ways hereinafter described :—

First.—By his own bodily power.

Secondly.—By desposing any substance in such a manner that the motion or change or cessation of motion takes place without any further act on his part, or on the part of any other person.

Thirdly.—By inducing any animal to move, to change its motion or to cease to move.

Raising a lathi.—Where the accused raised a lathi to strike the complainant, and the latter ran away to save himself the offence under this section is completed. 12 A. L. J. 154=23 Ind. Cas. 183=15 Cr. L. J. 231 ; 74 Ind. Cas. 1049=24 Cr. L. J. 857=1923 A. 333.

Force.—Where violence has been caused to an inanimate object only and not to any person, there was no criminal "force" as defined in this section. 18 C. W. N. 1150=15 Cr. L. J. 720=26 Ind. Cas. 168 ; 17 N. L. J. 27. "Force" as defined in this section contemplates the presence of the person to whom it is used, that is to say, it contemplates the presence of the person using the force and of the person to whom the force is used. 152 Ind. Cas. 162=36 P. L. R. 91=1934 Cr. C. 702=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 454. As regards other cases of criminal force, vide 28 Cr. L. J. 191 ; 4 P. R. 1880 : 72 Ind. Cas. 616=24 Cr. L. J. 456. Where it is proved that a person broke open the lock of the plaintiff's house, threw out all the property belonging to him therefrom, and put a lock of his own on the house thereafter, the offence of criminal force within the meaning of s. 349 of the Penal Code is made out. 99 Ind. Cas. 863=28 Cr. L. J. 191=A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 131.

350. Whoever intentionally uses force to any person, without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force, to cause, or knowing it to be likely that, by the use of such force, he will cause, injury, fear, or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other.

Illustrations.

(a). Z is sitting in a moored boat on a river. A unfastens the moorings and thus intentionally causes the boat to drift down the stream. Here A intentionally causes motion to Z, and he does this by disposing substances in such a manner that the motion is produced without any other acts of any person's part. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending or knowing it to be likely that this use of force will cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z. A has used criminal force to Z.

(b) Z is riding in a chariot. A lashes Z's horses, and thereby causes them to quicken their pace. Here A has caused change of motion to Z by inducing the animals to change their motion. A has therefore used force to Z; and if A has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(c) Z is riding in a palanquin. A intending to rob Z seizes the pole, and stops the palanquin. Here A has caused a cessation of motion to Z, and he has done this by his own bodily power. A has therefore used force to Z; and as A has acted thus intentionally, without Z's consent, in order to the commission of an offence. A has used criminal force to Z.

(d) A intentionally pushes against Z in the street. Here A has by his own bodily power, moved his own person so as to bring it into contact with Z. He has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z he has used criminal force to Z.

(e) A throws a stone, intending or knowing it to be likely that the stone will be thus brought into contact with Z, or with Z's clothes, or with something carried by Z, or that it will strike water, and dash up the water against Z's clothes, or something carried by Z. Here, if the throwing of the stone produces the effect of causing any substance to come into contact with Z, or Z's clothes, A has used force to Z, and if he did so without Z's consent, intending thereby to injure, frighten, or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(f) A intentionally pulls up a woman's veil. Here A intentionally uses force to her; and if he does so without her consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy her, he has used criminal force to her.

(g) Z is bathing. A pours into the bath water which he knows to be boiling. Here A intentionally by his own bodily power, causes such motion in the boiling water as brings that water into contact with Z, or with other water so situated that such contact must affect Z's sense of feeling. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury, fear or annoyance to Z. A has used criminal force.

(h) A incites a dog to spring upon Z without Z's consent. Here if A intends to cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, he uses criminal force to Z.

Intentionally.—The word 'intentionally' shows that all involuntary accidental, or merely negligent acts are excluded. (Vide Mayne s. 415).

Without his consent.—There is a difference between doing an act without the consent of a person, and against his will. The latter implies mental opposition to an act which is anticipated before it, takes place. Where it is an element of an offence that the act should have been done without the consent of the person affected by it, some evidence must be offered that the act was done to him against his will or without his consent. Reg. v. Fletcher, L. R. I. C. C 89 cited in Mayne's Criminal Law s. 415.

Criminal force.—'Criminal force' in s. 350 contemplates criminal force used against a person and not against any matter or substance. 22 Cr. L. J. 329=2 Pat. L. T. 120=61 Ind. Cas. 57. Breaking open of a lock is not use of criminal force. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 830=26 P. L. R. 500=28 Cr. L. J. 676. The offence of being members of an unlawful assembly is one in the composition of which the use of criminal force does not enter, though the show of criminal force may exist. 25 C. 434=2 C. W. N. 305. To support an order under s. 522, for restoration of possession of immovable property there must be a finding that the dispossession was by the use of criminal force as defined in section 350 of the Penal Code. 27 C. 174=4 C. W. N. 307.

Scope.—This definition of criminal force appears to include what is termed by the English law "battery" that is, any even the least hurt or violence inflicted on the person of another. If there is the use of force as defined in the preceding section, and this is intentional on his part who uses it, and is also without the consent of the person against whom it is used, such use of force becomes criminal, when it has for its object the commission of an offence (see section 40), or the causing of injury (see section 44), or the causing of fear or annoyance. It will be observed that the definition of the offence does not include anything that the doer does by means of another person.—Morgan and Macpherson.

351. Whoever makes any gesture or any preparation intending or knowing it to be likely that such gesture or preparation will cause any person present to apprehend that he who makes that gesture or preparation is about to use criminal force to that person, is said to commit an assault.

Explanation.—Mere words do not amount to an assault. But the words which a person uses may give to his gestures or preparations such a meaning as may make those gestures or preparations amount to an assault.

Illustrations.

(a) A shakes his fist at Z intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that A is about to strike Z. A has committed an assault.

(b) A begins to unloose the muzzle of a ferocious dog, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that he is about to cause the dog to attack Z. A has committed an assault upon Z.

(c) A takes up a stick, saying to Z, "I will give you a beating." Here though the words used by A could in no case amount to an assault, and though the mere gesture, unaccompanied by any other circumstances, might not amount to an assault, the gesture explained by the words may amount to an assault.

Scope.—"An assault is something less than the use of criminal force, the force being cut short before the blow actually falls. It seems to consist in an attempt or offer by a person having present ability with force to do any hurt or violence to the person of another. And it is committed whenever a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril from a force already partially or fully put in motion is created. An assault is included in every use of criminal force. Mere words, it is explained, do not amount to an assault. Such acts as the following,—a blow which is purely accidental, an injury received in playing at any lawful sport by consent, reasonable chastisement of a child by his parent or guardian, or of a scholar by his school master, a blow or other violence in self-defence, the use of force by a public servant within the sphere of his duty, force used in defence of a man's property, and like, vide 24 Cr. L. J. 276=71 Ind. Cas. 996—are not offences, either under the head of criminal force or assault, or under any other provision of the code. By the Chapter of General Exception such acts are saved from being accounted offences.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Any gesture calculated to excite in the party threatened a reasonable apprehension that the party threatening intends immediately to offer violence or is about to use criminal force to the person threatened, constitute, if coupled with a present ability to carry such intention into execution, an assault in law. 1 B. H. C. R. 205. To substantiate a charge of assault upon a particular person, it is necessary that a gesture or preparation should be made by a person which would cause another person to apprehend that the person was about to use criminal force to him then and there. It would not be enough to prove that the words used and the preparations made were calculated to cause that person to apprehend that criminal force would be used to him, if he persisted in a certain course of conduct 30 C. 97=6 C. W. N. 342. Whether particular act amounts to assault depends on circumstance. A. I. R. 1935 Pat. 214.

Gesture or preparation.—Mere words do not amount to assault. But the words which the party threatening uses at the time may either give to his gestures such a meaning as may make them amount to an assault, or on the other hand, may prevent them from doing so. 1 B. H. C. 205. Mere threatening attitude is not sufficient. 8 M. L. T. 118=7 Ind. Cas. 416.

Cases.—Throwing a bottle into a house with the intention of frightening the inmates, constitutes an offence under this section. 4 Cr. L. J. 201=3 B. L. R. 194. Causing the death of a man, who had an enlarged spleen, by striking him is an offence under this section. 21 P. R. 1876 Cr.

352. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—Grave and sudden provocation will not mitigate the punishment for an offence under this section, if the provocation is sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for the offence, or if the provocation is given by anything done in obedience to the law, or by a public servant, in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant, or if the provocation is given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.

Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to mitigate the offence is a question of fact.

Criminal force.—To constitute 'criminal force', the offender must intentionally use force to any person without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used. Unless all these elements are present a person cannot be convicted under this section. U. B. R. (1892-1896), Vol. I. 226; U. B. R. 1892-1896 Vol. I. 228. An assault made by parties proceeding together and acting (in conjunction as to time, place, and assault is one single act, and not a divisible and distinct act. In such a case it cannot be said that the cause of action is not one common to all the parties. 14 W. R. 419. Where harm is very slight accused cannot be convicted under this section. A. W. Where the petitioners are convicted under ss. 352 and 242 of the Code, and sentenced separately for each of the offences, the acts found against them being, that they seized, dragged and pushed the complainant to a certain place, in order to punish him; held, that the petitioners have been punished for the whole series of acts, and that series of acts comes within the definition both of wrongful confinement and of using criminal force, and, accordingly the case falls within the second paragraph of s. 71 of the Code. 4 C. L. J. 90=4 Cr. L. J. 69. The complainant, a young woman, was going with an earthen jar through a public thoroughfare to fill water at a well, after sunrise, when the accused who was standing, leaning against his lathi, caught hold of the complainant's hand which prevented her from going in the direction in which she was going. It was also alleged that the accused had also solicited her to commit adultery with him. The Magistrate, finding the latter part of the charge unproved, convicted the accused under s. 352 I. P. Code. Held that though there was evidence to sustain a charge of criminal force under s. 352, I. P. Code the principle of s. 95 I. P. Code applied to the act of the accused in the case as it was a mere piece of foolish and vulgar chaff, which seriously to treat as a crime would be absurd. A. W. N. 1887, 73. When the accused, a coolie, was charged under s. 352 of the Penal Code with using force to a peon in the mamlatdar's office who prevented his running away from service, held, that no offence was committed, since the accused had a right to defend himself from the illegal act of the peon in wrongfully restraining him. Scope.—This section provides for the ordinary punishment for an assault or for using criminal force. A mitigation of punishment when there is grave and sudden provocation, is admitted here as in cases of culpable homicide and of hurt. The several General Exceptions concerning the right of private defence, acts done by consent, etc., should be borne in mind—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

353. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person being a public servant in the execution of his duty as such public servant or with intent to prevent or deter that person from discharging his duty as such duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done, or attempted to be done, by such person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The assault is aggravated because a public servant is the object of it. To support a charge under this section,—besides proof of the assault or use of criminal force, and that it was used against one who either was or was acting as a public servant—it should be shown that the accused had knowledge of the official character of the person assaulted. It will of course be open to the accused to show illegality or excess on the part of the public servant.”—Morgan and Macpherson. Assault or criminal force to woman with intent to outrage her modesty.

to outrage, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Scope.—In order to constitute an offence under this section mere knowledge that the modesty of a woman is likely to be outraged is sufficient without any deliberate intention having such outrage alone for its object. 1 Weir 347; 31 C. W. N. 583=103 Ind. Cas. 553. But an indecent assault upon a woman does not amount to an attempt to commit rape, unless the Court be satisfied that the conduct of the accused indicated a determination to gratify his passions at all events and in spite of all resistance. 5 B. 403. In order to constitute the offence there must be intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. 14 Cr. L. J. 149; 42 P. W. R. 1910; 16 P. W. R. 1912; 15 Ind. Cas. 309. 'Woman' is explained to denote a female human being of any age (vide section 10). 14 Bom. L. R. 961=13 Cr. L. J. 858=17 Ind. Cas. 794. The phrase "to outrage modesty" is indefinite; and it would be an outrage to the modesty of one woman to do her what would be thought nothing of by another. The taking indecent liberties with females will be punished by this section; but the provision is not confined to such cases. In a country, where many women consider themselves as dishonoured by exposure to the gaze of strangers many gross insults of a different kind, such as a man rudely thrusting his head into the covered palanquin of a woman of rank, may well be deemed to outrage female modesty.....Assaults committed with intention to commit rape are not, it seems, here contemplated."—Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—Where the accused took off the clothes of a woman, threw her on the ground and then sat down besides her but said nothing, he committed an offence under this section. 116 P. L. R. 1912 ; 14 Bom. L. R. 961=13 Cr. L. J. 858. But where evidence proves that the accused stripped a girl nearly naked and was lying upon her, when her cries attracted people to the spot, he committed an offence under sections 376, 511, and not merely under this section. 8 Ind. Cas. 257=42 P. W. R. 1910 Cr. In such cases magistrates should not try the case under s. 354, in order to give themselves jurisdiction. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I, 234 ; U. B. R. (1897-1901). Vol. I, 84.

Proof.—A charge under this section is one which is very easy to make and very difficult to rebut, and also one which experience shows women are sometimes apt to make from one motive or another without the slightest foundation. So, when such charges are made, it is necessary to see whether they are supported by independent evidence besides that of the woman herself, or, are corroborated by her conduct and the surrounding circumstances and are consistent with ordinary probabilities. U. B. R. (1892-1896), Vol. I, 229 ; U. B. R. (1897-1901), Vol. I, 325.

Procedure.—It is obviously unjust to convict an accused under this section, without calling upon him for his defence in respect of the particulars which differentiate the offence from that stated in the charge against him under s. 352. 1 L. B. R. 287. See also, 15 Cr. L. J. 366=23 Ind. Cas. 734.

Where the accused was convicted and sentenced for the offence under s. 354 and 506, Penal Code, to three months' rigorous imprisonment for each offence ; Held that the intimidation by throwing a knife formed part of the assault in this case ; consequently the sentence under s. 506 was illegal and must be set aside. 12 Cr. L. J. 242=10 Ind. Cas. 771. The fact that A is in love with B and is jealous of C does not authorise him to pull B's hair and hand. An assault of this kind made in the presence of several persons is calculated to outrage the woman's modesty and is punishable under s. 354 of the Penal Code. 13 Cr. L. J. 53=13 Ind. Cas. 389=4 Bur. L. T. 268. Every assault on a woman or every use of criminal force to a woman does not necessarily fall under s. 354, I. P. Code namely, an assault or use of criminal force to a woman with intent to outrage her modesty. In order to construct an offence under that section it is necessary that the assault or use of criminal force must be used with intent to outrage a woman or knowing it to be likely that he would thereby outrage her modesty. 31 C. W. N. 583=103 Ind. Cas. 553=28 Cr. L. J. 697=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 505. An offence under s. 354 is only committed when a person assaults or uses criminal force to a woman intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby outrage her modesty. Where it is clear that the woman either had no modesty to mention or that it was not such as would be outraged by any of the acts which are attributed to the accused such an offence cannot be said to be committed. 108 Ind. Cas. 81=29 Cr. L. J. 325=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 326. Intention to outrage or knowledge that assault is likely to outrage modesty of girl is necessary under section 354. Per M. C. Ghose in 142 Ind. 355. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, intending thereby to dishonour that person, otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Assault or criminal force with intent to dishonour person, otherwise than on grave provocation.

Provocation.—The complainant who was not a pleader, intruded into the pleader's room at Belgaum, in order to see a pleader. The accused, a pleader, objected to the complainant's presence in the room and had read out to him one of the rules which required an out-sider to withdraw from the room if his presence was objected to. The complainant refused to leave the room and sat resolutely down. The accused went to him and put him out of the room. Held that no offence was committed under this section since complainant's intention in remaining in the room, after his presence was objected to, was to annoy the accused, and the accused did not exceed his rights in putting the trespasser out of the room. Emperor v. More Balvant, 15 Bom. L. R. 1039. In order to convict a person under this section absence of grave and sudden provocation should be proved. 96 Ind. Cas. 859=27 Cr. L. J. 1003=1927 Nag. 47.

Intention.—The intention to dishonour may be supposed to exist when the assault or criminal force is by means grossly insulting, such as kicking a man, pulling a man's nose, or laying a whip across the shoulders.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—An accused person while under trial struck a Sub-Inspector of police, who was in the witness-box giving evidence against him. Held, that the offence of which the accused was guilty in this respect was rather that provided for by s. 355 of the Penal Code, than that punishable under s. 332 of the Code. A. W. N. 1907, 186=6 Cr. L. J. 22. In order to prove that the assault by the accused was made with intent to dishonour a woman, absence of grave and sudden provocation has to be proved. 96 Ind. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

356. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, in attempting to commit theft on any property which that person is then wearing or carrying, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Application.—This section applies to a case where criminal force is used in an attempt to commit theft and not where theft has been committed. The latter offence amounts to robbery. Reg. v. Mukum, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 3.

"The aggravation consists in the attempt to commit theft on property which is in personal use or under personal protection. Attempts to pick-pocket or to commit theft from the person, when the offence is not completed, and even when the offence could not be completed (as where the pocket contains nothing) will be punishable under this section, if the thief in his attempt does anything which amounts to an assault or use of criminal force." Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

357. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person, in attempting wrongfully to confine that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Notes.—Where the accused put his safa round the neck of a boy on his refusal to accompany him to a certain place and proceeded to drag him for a distance of about 50 or 60 yards as a result of which the boy subsequently died. Held, that an offence under s. 357 had been committed by the accused and not one under s. 304A. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 275.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by any Magistrate.

358. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person on grave and sudden provocation given by that person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—The last section is subject to the same explanation as section 352.

Notes.—In case of use of criminal force to canal patrol on being abused should be punished under section 358. 1934 Cr. C. 1081=A. I. R. 1934 All. 872=3 A.W. R. 699.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Of Kidnapping, Abduction etc.

Notes.—The former division of this chapter of offences against the human body have gradually led to the present. Pain or hurt of body is not necessarily a part of the offence comprised under this head. And some of these offences may be committed without any such abridgment of personal liberty as amounts to wrongful restraint or confinement—Morgan and Macpherson.

Of Kidnapping, Abduction, Slavery, and Forced Labour.

Kidnapping.

359. Kidnapping is of two kinds : kidnapping from British India, and kidnapping from lawful guardianship.

Notes.—Accused separately charged with kidnapping and abduction can be tried for each of such offences in one trial. 146 Ind. Cas. 305=37 C. W. N. 1074=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 676.

360. Whoever conveys any person beyond the limits of British India Kidnapping from British without the consent of that person, or of some person legally authorized to consent on behalf of that person is said to kidnap that person from British India.

Scope.—“The offence of kidnapping from British India, consists, according to this definition, in conveying any person out of the protection of law without his consent vide 8 M. L. T. 91 ; (1910) M. W. N. 262 ; 20 Bom. L. R. 372=19 Cr. L. J. 602 or the consent of some person legally authorised to consent on his behalf ; or with such consent, when it is not freely or intelligently given, but is obtained by deception or under any of these circumstances which have been explained ; (vide section 90 to invalidate a consent). This offence is sometimes committed by means of assault, and is sometimes attended with restraint. But this will not always be the case. For example, a labourer who has been induced to embark on board of a ship by false assurances that he shall be taken to a country where he shall have good wages, but whom the captain of the ship intends to sell for a slave, or otherwise illegally to dispose of, may be conveyed beyond the limits of British India and so kidnapped without being either assaulted or restrained. This offence may be committed on a child, or on a grown up man or woman. The carrying of a grown up person by force from one place in British India to another, and the enslaving him within the British Territories, are offences sufficiently provided for under the heads of restraint and confinement.

“The enticing a grown up person by false promises to go from one place in British India to another place also within British India may be subject for a civil action and under certain circumstances for a criminal prosecution. But it does not come under the head of kidnapping. This offence can only be committed on a grown up man by conveying him beyond the limits of the British Territories in India”—Morgan and Macpherson.

361. Whoever takes or entices any minor under fourteen years of age, if a male, or under sixteen years of age, if a female, or any person of unsound mind, out of keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship.

Explanation.—The words “lawful guardian” in this section include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of such minor or other person.

Exception.—This section does not extend to the act of any person who, in good faith believes himself to be the father of an illegitimate child, or who, in good faith, believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose.

Object.—The object of this section and cognate sections is at least as much to protect children of tender age from being abducted or seduced for improper purposes, as for the protection of the rights of parents and guardians. 8 C. 971.

Application.—This offence consists in taking a minor, or a person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of his lawful guardian, without the consent of such guardian. This mode of kidnapping, like that defined in the last preceding section, may be committed with assault or the use of criminal force, and without being attended with any restraint. A child, for example, who is decoyed from its guardians, who soon forgets its home, and who consents to remain with the kidnapper, cannot be said to have assaulted or restrained, but it is none the less kidnapped. The consent of the kidnapped person is immaterial, and it is not necessary that the taking, or enticing should be shown to be by means of force or fraud.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Essence of the offence.—The essence of the offence kidnapping as defined in this section, is the taking of the minor out of the keeping of the guardian without the guardian's consent. 17 P. R. 1916 Cr ; 4 W. R. 6 ; 10 W. R. 35 ; 3 N. W. P. 146 ; 95 Ind. Cas. 372 ; 27 C. 1041 ; 28 Cr. L. J. 820. Motive has nothing to do with the offence under this section. 31 A. 448 ; 18 Ind Cas. 653.

Scope.—The section and the explanation are express and exhaustive in their terms, and to constitute the offence of kidnapping or abducting the following things must be proved. A taking and enticing of a minor under fourteen years of age if a male, or under sixteen years of age if a female or any person of unsound mind from the custody of the following persons : (1) the natural guardians ; (2) the legal guardians if the natural guardian be dead or (3) a person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor. The last kind of guardians includes all persons other than those mentioned in (1) and (2) who, for the time being, may be lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor, such as a school master or a friend at whose house the minor may be staying or such like persons standing in a similar degree of relationship. But this section has no application to self-constituted guardians nor to persons such as waifs or strays who are taken up and maintained by charitable institutions. 4 Pat. L. J. 74. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from lawful guardianship, and it is not an offence continuing as long as minor is kept out of such guardianship. 26 M. 454=2 Weir 296. A child, ten years of age, is prima facie subject to guardianship, and no one is at liberty to take away such child without permission properly obtained. 3 B. 178. The offence of kidnapping is not necessarily complete as soon as the minor is removed from the house of the guardian. When the act of kidnapping would be complete would appear to be a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case. 27 C. 1041=4 C. W. N. 645 (F. B.) Where a minor girl was driven from her parental roof and was found some days thence, in the company of the accused, no offence of kidnapping is established. 1912 M. W. N. 538=13 Cr. L. J. 598=16 Ind. Cas. 166. The husband of a Hindu minor girl is her lawful guardian. It amounts to kidnapping even if, without any criminal intention, the father takes away his minor daughter from the lawful guardianship of the husband. 17 C. 298. To bring a case within the purview of the expression "lawfully entrusted" in explanation to s. 361, it must be clearly shown that not only the mother of girl requested the alleged guardian to take the girl under his protection but that he accepted the trust. 1930 Cr. L. J. 649=A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 164. According to Hindu Law, the husband's sapindas are the guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father and his relations. 27 P. R. 1915 Cr. The question whether the taking of a minor girl out of the custody of her lawful guardian was or was not complete at a given moment is a question for determination with reference to the circumstances proved in each particular case. It may no doubt be difficult in some cases of kidnapping from lawful guardianship to determine the precise moment at which the taking is complete. Speaking generally, the keeping of the guardian would be at an end when the person of the minor had been transferred from the custody of the guardian or some person on his behalf in to the custody of some person not entitled to custody of the minor. 55 P. L. R. 1916 = 25 P. W. R. 1916 Cr. = 17 Cr. L. J. 236 = 34 Ind. Cas. 652. The pledging of girl to secure a loan is not a legal contract and may not be enforced in law but if a minor is retained in the custody of a person with the consent of the lawful guardian he will not commit the offence of kidnapping under s. 361, Penal Code. 10 Pat. L. T. 326 = 119 Ind. Cas. 72 = 30 Cr. L. J. 580 = A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 316 = 1922 Cr. 97. In the case of girl below 16 years of age, whose parents are dead, her brother, though he is under 18, is deemed to be her lawful guardian. 1929 Cr. 563 = A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 835.

Takes.—The word "taking" in this section is nothing but physical taking. 15 Cr. L. J. 630. The taking away must be by some overt act. 27 Ind. Cas. 181. The word "taking" is not confined to mere physical taking. It signifies some act done which is the proximate cause of the person going out. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 585 = 54 M. L. J. 456. Abduction need not be forcible. 3 W. R. 9. The offence is completed as soon as the minor is actually taken away from lawful guardianship. A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 493 = 5 Pat. 536 = 7 P. L. T. 812; see also A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 289.

Minor.—"The age or mental incapacity of the person taken is a matter of fact as to which the accused may either have no opinion or may have no erroneous opinion. It was decided in Reg. v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. 154, that even a bona fide belief reasonably entertained that a girl was over sixteen, was no defence." (Mayne's Cr. Law § 469); see also A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 651; 12 Mys. L. J. 133; A. I. R. 1929 All. 82 = 1929 A. L. J. 111 = 30 Cr. L. J. 218. Minority is determined by s. 3 of the Majority Act. 37 M. 567.

Consent of minor.—Consent of the minor is of no avail. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 437 = 51 C. L. J. 352; see also A. I. R. 1930 All. 19 = 31 Cr. L. J. 85; 18 Cr. L. J. 18 = 17 P. R. 1916 (Cr.); A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 547 = 27 Cr. L. J. 851 = 95 Ind. Cas. 931; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 677 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1018 = 96 Ind. Cas. 874; A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 279 = 28 Cr. L. J. 659; A. I. R. 1929 All. 703 = 30 Cr. L. J. 985.

Lawful.—The word "lawful" means that which is opposed to unlawful, viz. legal, proper, right, without fraud, pressure or constraint. This word does not necessarily mean that the person who entrusts a minor to the care or custody of another must stand in possession of a person owing to legal duty or obligation to the mother. It is sufficient if the entrusting is effected without illegality or the commission of any unlawful act by a person legally competent so to do. 4 Pat. L. J. 74 = 49 Ind. Cas. 481. The mother of an illegitimate child is her lawful guardian. 8 C. 971. The minor must be under the guardianship of some one otherwise the offence is not committed. 13 Cr. L. J. 528. In matters of lawful guardianship preference should be given to those who are entitled to guardianship under the Guardians and Wards Act. 15 Cr. L. J. 640; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 820. In the last two cases maternal relatives were preferred to paternal relatives and the latter were convicted for taking away the minor from the guardianship of the former. According to Hindu Law, husband's relatives are the lawful guardians of the minor widow. 27 P. R. 1915 Cr. Where husband of a minor girl sold her, the purchaser is her lawful guardian. 7 P. R. 1911 Cr. A minor brother cannot be the guardian of his sister. 1922 Lah. 75; A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 316 = 3 L. L. J. 588 = 67 Ind. Cas. 831; but see A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 835. Where a minor girl leaves her husband's house without any persuasion, inducement or blandishment held out to her by the accused, and then, she goes to him, he cannot be convicted of an offence under this section. 73 Ind. Cas. 260. See also 1 L. B. R. 205; 87 Ind. Cas. 513 = 30 C. W. N. 215; but see 36 Ind. Cas. 580 = 14 A. L. J. 792. When a father sent his daughter to live in a house with certain of his relatives and one of their relatives married in that house the daughter without the consent of the father. Held that there was no taking out of lawful guardianship. 15 Cr. L. J. 630. The husband of a Hindu minor girl is her lawful guardian, and her father cannot take her away without her husband's consent without committing an offence of kidnapping. 17 C. 298. In this section the Legislature has advisedly preferred the phrase "keeping of the lawful guardian" to the word "possession" which frequently recurs in the Code in connection with the inanimate objects. The word "keeping" connotes the fact that it is compatible with independence of action and movement in the object kept. It implies neither prevention nor detention but rather maintenance, protection and control, manifested not by continual action, but as available on necessity arising. This relation between the minor and the guardian is certainly not dissolved so long as the minor can at will take advantage of it and place herself within the sphere of its operation. 6 Bom. L. R. 785=1 Cr. L. J. 93. Where minor is taken away from de facto guardianship with consent of alleged civil guardian, Sessions Judge should enquire into question of civil guardianship before deciding the case. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 446=32 Cr. L. J. 888=58 C. 897=35 C. W. N. 195. The words "lawful guardian" in this section are used in a wider sense. Every person entrusted with the care or custody of a minor is a lawful guardian. A. I. R. 1934 Pat. 170=1934 Cr. C. 367=15 P. L. T. 229=35 Cr. L. J. 814. The term does not conclude a person with whom the minor by consent of legal guardian resides. 12 Mys. L. J. 133. The test of lawful guardianship is that the infant or minor should be in a position to apply to his guardian for protection. A. I. R. 1929 Sind. 249; 17 Cr. L. J. 236. Mother of a Mohomedan girl of 7 years of age, is her guardian and not her husband. 27 C. W. N. 531.

Consent.—In order to constitute an offence under this section there must be taking of the minor out of the keeping of the guardian without the guardian's consent. A consent given on a misrepresentation of fact is one given under a misconception of fact within the meaning of section 90 of the Penal Code, and the consent of a guardian so obtained is not useful as a consent under this section. 17 P. R. 1916 Cr. The consent of the girl does not affect the offence. 2 W. R. 61; 2 W. R. 5; 7 W. R. 36; Reg v. Mankietow, Dears. C. C. 159.

Charge.—A charge of kidnapping from lawful guardianship should contain the name of the guardian. 1 Wyman's Rev. Cir. and Crim. Reporter, 16. In a charge the Judge should use the words of the section and must not substitute phraseology of his own. 13 C. W. N. 754.

When the offence is completed.—The offence under this section is completed the moment a minor as described in this section is taken out of the custody of a lawful guardian and is not a continuing one. So there cannot be any abatement of this offence by conduct which commences only after the minor has once been completely taken out of the keeping of the guardian. 38 A. 664=14 A. L. J. 765. See also 6 P. R. 1894 Cr. The offence is complete when the minor is actually taken away from lawful guardianship and it is not an offence continuing as long as a minor is kept out of such guardianship. 26 M. 454.

Explanation.—The explanation to this section is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors. It is intended to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian", any person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor. 24 M. 284=1 Weir 349=2 Weir 458; 10 M. L. J. 405. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant for a limited purpose and for a limited time, cannot determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purpose of the criminal law. Such a temporary guardianship does not exclude the higher legal guardianship of the father. In such cases, the court must consider all the facts and see whether they are consistent or not with the continuance of the father's legal possession of the minor. If they are not inconsistent the minor must be held to be in the father's possession or keeping, even though the actual possession should be temporarily with a friend or other person. Ibid. Where a minor girl comes to the house of her father with the consent of her husband, her father is her de facto guardian. 11 Cr. L. J. 9=4 Ind. Cas. 543=13 C. W. N. 754; see also 8 S. L. R. 182=16 Cr. L. J. 117=27 Ind. Cas. 181. The word "include" is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors, but rather to extend that protection by including in the term lawful guardian or any person, lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. 1922 Lah. 380=68 Ind. Cas. 620. Where a Hindu minor is living with a person who is not her nearest male relative, the latter commits an offence under this section if he takes the minor away from the guardianship of such relative without his consent. The technical plea of legal guardianship can be raised only by a guardian appointed by a Civil Court. 42 A. 146=18 A. L. J. 64. The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardianship's keeping. The physical control of the minor is not always necessary to constitute "keeping" or custody. 12 Mys. L. J. 133. Without the explanation the guardianship is limited to lawful guardianship. By the explanation the term "guardian" has been extended to any person lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of a minor. The term "entrust" implies the giving, handing over or confiding of something by one person to another. It involves the idea of active, power and motive by the person reposing the confidence towards the person in whom the confidence is reposed. The term "lawfully entrust or entrusted" means a declaration of trust and the handing over or the giving or confining of a minor to the care and custody of another by a person competent to do so unaffected by any illegality or impropriety coupled with the assent, express or implied of the person in whom the trust is vested or imposed. Neither the declaration of the trust itself nor its acceptance need be necessarily in writing; it is sufficient if the declaration is verbally made and given or if it arises from a course of conduct consistent only with the existence of such antecedent declaration and accepted verbally or by necessary implication arising from the conduct of the party so entrusted with duty imposed. 4 Pat. L. J. 74=(1919) Pat. 33. Intention to give child in marriage in contravention of Act 19 of 1929 is "unlawful purpose." 143 Ind. Cas. 873=11 Rang. 81=34 Cr. L. J. 696=A. I. R. 1933 Rag. 98 (F. B.).

Exception.—A woman should not be convicted of kidnapping her own minor children from the lawful guardianship of their father, when she believes, in good faith herself entitled to the lawful custody of the children. 1 Weir 384—2 Weir 665.

Cases.—The mother of Mahomedan minor girl of fifteen is her lawful guardian even if she attains puberty. 60 P. R. 1905 Cr. The prosecution must prove that the accused knew that the kidnapped person was under lawful guardianship. 27 P. R. 1887 Cr. Paternal relatives of a minor Hindu girl are not justified in removing her from lawful guardianship by fraud or force for the purpose of getting her married. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 320. Where the two accused took a minor girl from her husband in Bikanir, detained her there for a month, then brought her to Karachi by train, where they detained her for three days, the offence was completed at Bikanir. 7 S. L. R. 17=20 Ind. Cas. 599=14 Cr. L. J. 439. Where a girl under sixteen years of age left the guardianship of her husband and father-in-law of her own free will and not for the first time, and after that stayed with accused quite voluntarily and without any force having been exercised or deception practised upon her, held, it did not amount to taking or enticing the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian, nor did it amount to compelling her by force or inducing her by deceitful means to go from any place, and it was not an offence within the meaning of ss. 361, 362 and 366 Penal Code. 12 A. L. J. 265=23 Ind. Cas. 473=15 Cr. L. J. 265; see also U. B. R. 1912, 2nd Qr. 136=14 Cr. L. J. 109=18 Ind. Cas. 669. The consent of kidnapped person is immaterial, and it is not necessary for a conviction, under section 361, that the taking or enticing should be shown to have been by means of force or fraud. 2 W. R. Cr. 5; 2 W. R. Cr. 61; 3 W. R. Cr. 9; 3 W. R. Cr. 15; 7 W. R. Cr. 36. For conviction of kidnapping under ss. 361 and 363 of the Penal Code, that the accused took or enticed from lawful guardianship the person kidnapped must be established. 10 W. R. Cr. 53; 16 W. R. Cr. 42. To entice away a child playing on a public road is to kidnap it from lawful guardianship. 7 W. R. Cr. 98. It is not incumbent on the prosecution in a case of kidnapping under s. 361, Penal Code, to prove that the accused knew that the minor had a lawful guardian. It is for the accused to prove ignorance of the fact of the existence of a lawful guardian, when he raises that plea, though it does not follow that such ignorance will be a complete answer to the charge of an offence under ss. 361 and 363. 27 P. R. 1887 Cr. Motive has nothing to do with the offence of kidnapping though it might have much to say to the punishment. 6 A. L. J. 682=3 Ind. Cas. 480=31 A. 448=10 Cr. L. J. 295. The right of a paternal relation of a minor girl to select a husband and perform her marriage is not according to the Hindu law, absolute as against the guardian. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 820.

Abetment of Kidnapping.—A Hindu wife removing her infant daughter and marrying her without her husband's warrant is guilty of abetment of kidnapping. 8 C. 969=11 C. L. R. 6. The only evidence against the accused person, charged with abetment of kidnapping was first, that he was at the house of certain prostitutes who kidnapped a girl, secondly that he was the first man, who had connection with the girl, thirdly that he carried her about from place to place, and fourthly, that he endeavoured to conceal himself and that he himself absconded. Held that there was no evidence to show that the accused abetted the offence of kidnapping. 2 C. W. N. 81. There can be no abetment of kidnapping by conduct commencing only after the minor has been completely taken out of the keeping of the guardian when the guardian keeping of the minor is at an end. 6 P. R. 1894 Cr.

62. Whoever by force compels, or by any deceitful means induces, any person to go from any place, is said to abduct that person.
Abduction.

Scope.—This section does not define an offence. It is merely a definition of the word "abduction" which occurs in some of the penal provisions which follow—abduction differs from kidnapping, because there may be abduction without a removal of the person from the protection of the law, or even from lawful guardianship. It may be observed on the things which constitute abduction according to this definition, that to compel by force a person to go from any place is not an offence specifically under this code, although it may necessarily involve the commission of an offence, an assault at least, and probably wrongful restraint. To induce a person by deceitful means to go from any place is ordinarily not an offence, but only a subject for a civil action. Neither of these things are specially punished as offence here; they merely constitute the definition of abduction. An abduction is made an offence only when it is committed with certain aggravating circumstances.—Morgan and Macpherson; vide also 8 P. L. C. 1924; 24 Cr. L. J. 921; 22 Ind. Cas. 730; 15 W. R. 4.

Abduction.—When a man by a promise of marriage induces a woman to leave her house, but does not marry her or get her married he is guilty of deceiving her as mentioned in this section. 4 A. L. J. 482. In order to constitute an offence under this section the woman must be compelled by force or induced by deceitful means to leave her husband's home. 11 P. R. 1888. Cr.

The offence of abduction is a continuing offence and a girl is being abducted not only when she is first taken from one place to another. 12 A. L. J. 91; 7 S. L. R. 128; 24 Ind. Cas. 599. When the accused uses deceitful means in abducting a woman from one place to another, he is guilty of an offence under this section. But if he repeats the same deceitful means in order to abduct her again from the latter place to a third place, he commits a second offence under this section. 24 Ind. Cas. 599; 40 A. 507. A person who compelled a girl by force to go away from the place where her mother-in-law was, evidently with the intention to have sexual intercourse with her, is liable to be punished for committing an offence under s. 366 read with this section. 9 M. C. T. 406=10 Ind. Cas. 290. Bare abduction, without the intention pointed out in the different sections dealing with the subject, is not per se an offence. 6 C. W. N. 208.

Where an accused person deceitfully married a girl with the intention of prostituting her held, that the fact of his marriage dishonestly contracted with an illicit view did not prevent his act of inducing the girl to leave her home from amounting to abduction under s. 362, or entitle the accused to be acquitted of an offence under s. 366 Penal Code. 7 P. R. 1881. Cr. A conviction for abduction was quashed no force or deceit having been practised on the person abducted. 2 W. R. Cr. 7. Where an accused person dishonestly induced a girl to marry him and leave her home with the view of causing her to prostitute herself. Held, that the fact of such marriage did not exculpate him from being guilty of abduction under s. 362, Penal Code, or of an offence under s. 366. 7 P. R. 1881 Cr. Neither under the Penal Code nor under the Frontier Regulation is it an offence for a married woman to abet her own abduction. 40 P. R. 1866 Cr.; 6 P. R. 1871 Cr.; 14 P. R. 1875 Cr.; 11 P. R. 1883 Cr. Where the kidnapped girl goes with the accused on his false representation an offence under this section has been committed. 73 Ind. Cas. 510=24 Cr. L. J. 622=1923 Lah. 158. Abduction in itself constitutes no offence and only becomes an offence when certain criminal intents are proved. 75 Ind. Cas. 297=24 Cr. L. J. 921. Abduction itself is not an offence but becomes so when taken in connection with other factors which form the subject matter with other sections of Chapter 16 of the I. P. Code. 29 P. L. R. 444=109 Ind. Cas. 127=10 Lah. L. J. 325=29 P. L. R. 479. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence. As soon as the minor is actually removed from the custody of his or her guardian, the offence is committed. The offence is not a continuing one as long as the minor is kept out of guardianship. A. I. R. 1931 All. 55.

363. Whoever kidnaps any person from British India or from lawful guardianship, shall be punished with imprisonment for kidnapping. imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope and object.—This section and section 366 are intended not only to protect the rights of parents and lawful guardians of minor, but also to protect the minors as well. So the willingness of the minor or of the temporary guardian does not protect the accused. 12 L. J. 133.

Lawful guardianship.—A de facto guardian of a minor, whose guardianship is not against the wishes of the de jure guardian, is a lawful guardian. 12 Cr. L. J. 239=10 Ind. Cas. 281. According to Mahomedan Law the occurrence of puberty determines minority and the mother's right to custody. But for the purposes of this section regard must be had only to the definition of minority in s. 3 of the Majority Act. 37 M. 567. The guardianship of a husband is not terminated by a minor wife's running away from his house. 16 Ind. Cas. 768=13 Cr. L. J. 736. This section is applicable to married as well as to unmarried minor girls. 12 P. R. 1879 Cr. A mother can be convicted under this section where she takes the child out of the custody of the father. 9 Ind. Cas. 511; 18 C. W. N. 484. Removal of a ward by a teacher to a distant place is an offence under this section. 23 A. L. J. 10. When a person is kidnapped with the object of holding him to ransom an offence under section 363 or 365 has been committed. 91 Ind. Cas. 240. The consent of the minor does not excuse the accused. 27 Cr. L. J. 1018. Kumhars are not bound by strict Hindu Law, and as such a father cannot be convicted under this section for taking her minor daughter from her husband's house. 24 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=161 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 639=25 Ind. Cas. 839. According to Hindu Law the husband's relations, if any exists within the degree of a sapinda, are the guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father and his relations. 27 P. R. 1915 Cr. The testimony of the kidnapped person, if satisfactory, legally suffices for a conviction for kidnapping. 7 W. R. Cr. 104. To constitute the offence of kidnapping, it must be shown that the person was abducted from lawful guardianship which is the guardianship of a person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of a minor. 2 N. W. P. 286. The offence of kidnapping under s. 363 is not a continuing offence. 19 A. 109=A. W. N. 1896, 191; 64 Ind. Cas. 842=23 Cr. L. J. 58=24 O. C. 329. A minor girl left her parents' house with the intention of asking the accused to take her away and of going away with him if he consented, and the accused took the girl away as desired by her. Held, the question was whether the female minor, when she left her guardian's house, had given up the intention of returning home; that, in this case, the girl, when she left her parents' house, had no such intention of not returning as to remove her from their guardianship, and that the accused was therefore guilty of the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship. U. B. R., 1909 3rd Qr. Penal Code 27=4 Ind. Cas. 901=11 Cr. L. J. 81. When the mother from whose custody a Mahomedan minor girl was removed by the accused was proved to have married in a stranger family and consequently lost her right of guardianship, held, that the conviction under s. 363, I. P. Code, could not be sustained. 1930 Cr. C. 1057=51 C. L. J. 476=128 Ind. Cas. 181=32 Cr. L. J. 90=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 665. Where an act of restraint or confinement in an attempt to kidnap has been exercised in furtherance of the attempt and goes to form part of that offence, and it is not done with any intention or object which can be separated from the general intention to kidnap, it will constitute an integral part of that offence and should not form the subject of a separate conviction and sentence. 6 N. W. P. 293. Until a Mahomedan girl attains her puberty, her mother is entitled, under the Mahomedan Law to the guardianship of the girl in preference to her husband. So a mother cannot be convicted under this section for removing such a girl from the custody of her mother-in-law. 32 C. 444=2 Cr. L. J. 328; see also, 21 P. L. 1906=3 Cr. L. J. 296=60 P. R. 19=5 Cr.

"If a girl goes on a visit with or without the knowledge of the guardian, she is still in the legal keeping of her parent, and, further, it is not necessary that there should be any intention to make an unlawful use of the minor to constitute the offence of kidnapping." 1 S. L. R. 104 Cr.=8 Cr. L. J. 361; see also 1 L. B. R. 205; U. B. R. 1907, 3rd Qr. Penal Code 11=14 Bur. L. R. 262=7 Cr. L. J. 7, 210. A husband or those who aided him cannot be convicted of kidnapping for taking away his own wife. W. R., 1864 Cr. 12. Where a person carries away, without the consent of her lawful guardian, a girl to whom he had been betrothed by her father, after the father had changed his mind and broken off the marriage, he is guilty of kidnapping from lawful guardianship. 4 W. R. Cr. 7. When a girl below 18 years but above 16 years was kidnapped from husband, he can not be convicted under s. 363. 146 Ind. Cas. 248=57 B. 537=35 Bom. L. R. 886=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 417 (F. B.).

Where persons are kidnapped with the object of holding them to ransom, the kidnapper is guilty under s. 363 or s. 365 but not under s. 364 I. P. Code, 91 Ind. Cas. 240=27 Cr. L. J. 64. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from the lawful guardianship. It is not an offence continuing so long as he is kept out of such guardianship. 5 Pat. 536=27 Cr. L. J. 792=95 Ind. Cas. 392=7 Pat. L. T. 812=A. I. R. 1926 P. 460. Although consent of the person kidnapped is no defence to a charge under s. 363, where the accused and the girl were neighbours and for this reason became fond of each other and when her marriage was about to take place the accused decided to take her away and she agreed, held, that it is not a bad case of kidnapping though technically it amounts to such and that the accused should not be punished severely. 96 Ind. Cas. 874=27 Cr. L. J. 1018=A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 677. One P. who was formerly a Christian changed her religion and became a convert to Hinduism. She left the house in which she was living during the absence of her husband who had gone to another place. When the latter came back he demanded his children but they were not handed over to him. Held, that on these facts there is no question of an offence under s. 363. 102 Ind. Cas. 209=28 Cr. L. J. 513=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 496. Whether the offence of kidnapping is complete when the person has been taken out of the custody of the lawful guardian is a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case. Where he enticed the girl to come out of the gachi to the road and then to the motor car where R was sitting and R drove away with her in order to kidnap her. Held, that R was rightly convicted under s. 363 I. P. Code. 109 Ind. Cas. 436=28 Cr. L. J. 820=6 Pat. 471. The test of lawful guardianship is that the infant or minor should be in a position to apply to his guardian for protection. The law does not require that the minor should have been actually taken from the actual custody of the guardian. A. I. R. 1929 Sind. 249=1929 Cr. C. 543.

To constitute kidnapping the intention to prevent the kidnapped person from returning to his guardian is not necessary. 69 Ind. Cas. 444=23 Cr. L. J. 716. In the absence of the mother, the mother's mother is the guardian of a Mahomedan minor girl who has not attained puberty. 37 Cr. L. J. 329=27 C. W. N. 531=73 Ind. Cas. 936=24 Cr. L. J. 712=1923 Cal. 672. If a minor abandons her guardian with no intention of returning, she can not be held to continue in the guardian's keeping. 87 Ind. Cas. 513=26 Cr. L. J. 977. Removal of a boy by a temporary guardian without the consent of a permanent guardian is an offence under this section. 23 A. L. J. 10=86 Ind. Cas. 428=26 Cr. L. J. 796=A. I. R. 1925 All. 295. The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence. 131 Ind. Cas. 246=1930 A. L. J. 1485=1931 Cr. C. 127=53 A. 140=32 Cr. L. J. 690=A. I. R. 1931 All. 55.

From British India.—Where the accused induced certain woman to leave British India for Ceylon, on the misrepresentation that they were to be married to his sons, and after arriving at Ceylon made them work as coolies on the estate. Held that the woman must be held to have been taken without their consent, and the accused were guilty of an offence under this section. 6 Ind. Cas. 503=1910 M. W. N. 262=8 M. L. T. 91=11 Cr. L. J. 368. Where the attempt is made for kidnapping from British India, and the attempt fails, the abetment of such an offence is punishable under ss. 363 and 116 and not under ss. 363 and 109. 1 M. 173=1 Weir 353.

Cases.—Magistrates should not give themselves jurisdiction by trying under s. 363, cases which really fall under s. 366 I. P. Code. The form of a kidnapping which is punishable by s. 366 is a seriously aggravated form, which only Sessions Courts and District Magistrates in the exercise of their special powers, have jurisdiction to try. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 328. To establish kidnapping, there must be evidence that the minor was taken out of the keeping of the lawful guardianship without her consent. 14 Cr. L. J. 149=19 Ind. Cas. 149 (F. B.)=6 Bur. L. T. 21. Where a Hindu sold his wife, a girl of 16 years of age to S, a barber, with whom she was living, and, where the girl, while living with S, was persuaded by the accused to leave the house of S and go away with another man: Held, that S was the lawful guardian of the girl within the meaning of s. 361 and that, the accused was rightly convicted under s. 363 I. P. Code. 7 P. R. 1911 Cr.=154 P. L. R. 1911=10 Ind. Cas. 97=12 Cr. L. J. 211=31 P. W. R. 1911. When the accused were charged under s. 363 Indian Penal Code with having kidnapped a girl from the guardianship of her father and it appeared that the girl was over 16 at the time when she disappeared and that there was delay in making a report to the police. Held that the accused were not guilty of an offence under s. 363 of the Penal Code. 48 Ind. Cas. 351=19 Cr. L. J. 1011. Where a kidnapped child is left in the house of the accused and the accused gave information of it to the guardian through another, he is not guilty. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 392. = 1933 Cr. C. 636 = 140 Ind. Cas. 42. The moment a minor girl is taken away from the custody of a temporary guardian the offence of kidnapping is complete. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 53 = 130 Ind. Cas. 782 = 32 Cr. L. J. 615. Where a girl of 15 was kidnapped by an accused of 21 years old a sentence of four years rigorous imprisonment was reduced to two years. 135 Ind. Cas. 677 = 1933 Cr. C. 247 = 73 Cr. L. J. 190 = 33 P. L. R. 485 = A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 203.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

364. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person in order that such person may be murdered, or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered, shall be punished with transportation for life or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

(a) A kidnaps Z from British India, intending or knowing it to be likely that Z may be sacrificed to an idol. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A forcibly carries or entices B away from his home in order that B may be murdered. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Notes.—Where a person was abducted by the accused in order that he might be held to ransom, and where it did not follow as a matter of course that he was in danger of being murdered. Held that a conviction under this section cannot stand. 6 L. B. R. 160 ; 91 Ind. Cas. 240 = 27 Cr. L. J. 64.

In a prosecution under this section, where there was no incriminating evidence whatsoever against the accused beyond the fact that he and the deceased left together and were last seen together, and that the one returned without the other. Held, that although circumstances lead to a high degree of suspicion against the accused, they cannot be said to be inconsistent with any reasonable theory other than that the accused lured him away for the purpose of having him murdered, or being exposed to the danger of being murdered and hence no conviction could be safely had. 9 Lah. L. J. 396 = 103 Ind. Cas. 836 = 28 Cr. L. J. 758 = A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 658. In case of abduction of person in broad day light sentence of transportation for life held not too severe. 143 Ind. 365. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person with intent to cause that person to be secretly and wrongfully confined, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—To support a conviction under this section, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the abduction, it was the intention of the accused to secretly and wrongfully confine the person. 18 C. L. J. 578 = 22 Ind. Cas. 187. See also 92 Ind. Cas. 213 = 1925 Lah. 614 = 27 Cr. L. J. 229 ; 7 L. L. J. 529 = 26 P. L. R. 733 = 1925 Lah. 614 ; 73 Ind. Cas. 510 = 24 Cr. L. J. 622. Where an accused is charged with rape and abduction, the abduction being an aggravating circumstance, two separate sentences should not be passed. 89 Ind. Cas. 912 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1040 = 196 Lah. 114. The will of the woman may ultimately be gained over, but this will not affect the offence, when the kidnapping or abduction is with the knowledge or intention which the section mentions. Morgan and Macpherson.

Where a person was abducted by the accused in order that he might be held to ransom, and where it did not follow as a matter of course that he was in danger of being murdered. Held conviction under s. 364 cannot stand, but a conviction under s. 365 I. P. Code was justifiable, as though the main object was to extort money. 6 L. B. R. 160 = 19 Ind. Cas. 167 = 14 Cr. L. J. 167 = 6 Bur. L. T. 77. The accused abducted B in order to put pressure upon her friends to restore a young girl whom they had abducted. She was restored a few days after B was abducted and then B was also let go. It was not found that any harm was done to B. Held that under such circumstances heavy sentences of imprisonment on the accused were not necessary. 89 P. L. R. 1916=17 Cr. L. J. 472=36 Ind. Cas. 152. Where the appellant intended and actually did confine a girl wrongfully while he negotiated with her relations for the payment of a sum of Rs. 690 which was practically her ransom. Held this act therefore fell under s. 365 I. P. Code. 73 Ind. Cas. 510=24 Cr. L. J. 622=1923 Lah. 158. This section makes punishable the offence of abduction with intent to cause the person abducted to be secretly and wrongfully confined. 7 Lah. L. J. 520=26 P. L. R. 730=A. I. R. 195 Lah. 614. For a conviction under this section an intention to secretly confine abducted person is necessary. 92 Ind. Cas. 213=27 Cr. L. J. 229=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 614. An offence under s. 365 consists of kidnapping or abducting any person with intent to cause that person to be secretly and wrongfully confined. 109 Ind. Cas. 677=29 Cr. L. J. 597=10 A. I. Cr. R. 277. There can certainly be no offence of kidnapping if a person of age is conveyed from one part of British India to another. 137 Ind. Cas. 290=33 Cr. L. J. 514=9 O. W. N. 243.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

366. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any woman with intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled, to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Kidnapping or abducting woman to compel her marriage &c.

"And whoever, by means of criminal intimidation as defined in this Code or of abuse of authority or any other method of compulsion, induces any woman to go from any place with intent that she may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall also be punishable as aforesaid."

Kidnaps.—A woman, marrying her minor daughter to another in the absence of her husband kidnaps the minor from the lawful guardianship of her husband. 8 P. R. 1878 Cr. Where two girls ran away from their houses and remained for nearly one or two days in the house of a woman who belonged to the caste of Naihs in Kumaon, and no report was made to the Pradhan, held that the offence under this section was complete. 34 A. 340=9 A. L. J. 307. A person kidnapping two girls should be awarded separate sentences, the offence of kidnapping being separate. 1 O. C. 4. No offence is committed when a girl is abducted from the custody of her maternal uncle with the consent of her mother. 16 Cr. L. J. 237=27 Ind. Cas. 909. In order to sustain a conviction under this section it must be proved that the girl was taken out of the custody of her lawful guardian. 16 W. R. 42. There are two ingredients of an offence under this section. First there must be kidnapping or abduction as defined in section 361 or section 362 and secondly the kidnapping or abduction must be done with the intent or knowledge or with the object that certain things will happen as specified in this section. 3 Lah. L. J. 574. An accused cannot be convicted under this section where the girl left the protection of her guardian of her own accord and lived with the accused. 13 A. L. J. 848=16 Cr. L. J. 663. A person kidnapping a girl of fifteen years of age out of British India with her consent, for the purpose of seducing her to illicit intercourse, is not guilty of an offence under s. 366 I. P. Code. 42 B. 391=20 Bom. L. R. 372=45 Ind. Cas. 506=19 Cr. L. J. 602. It is not necessary for a conviction under s. 366 I. P. Code. that the accused should know definitely who the guardian of the minor girl is whom he finds wandering about. 9 O. & A. L. R. 1102. In case of marriage "will" means will of girl and not of guardian. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 442=32 Cr. L. J. 512=36 C. W. N. 49. Where the accused is charged for both kidnapping and abduction, separate charges are necessary. 144 Ind. Cas. 93=34 Cr. L. J. 682=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 563. Joint trial of accused charged with abduction alone and accused charged with both abduction and kidnapping is irregular. 144 Ind. Cas. 93=34 Cr. L. J. 682=1933 Cr. L. 940=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 563. In charges of kidnapping and wrongful confinement, there was joint trial in the first place and separate trials were held subsequently. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 203. Prosecution must prove age of girl. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 401=32 Cr. L. J. 1041; see also A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 119=28 S. L. R. 285=1934 Cr. C. 960. Where the Magistrate finds in a case under s. 363 I. P. Code, that there was prima facie sufficient evidence that the girl was enticed away; the Magistrate should examine and decide whether an offence under s. 366 or some other cognate offence against a female over 16 was committed and should not remain content with finding that the girl was not proved to be under s. 16. 1924 Lah. 718. To sustain a conviction under this section there must be a finding as to the use of force or deceitful means. 88 Ind. Cas. 463=26 Cr. L. J. 1151=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 454. Where it was not unlikely that the girl herself eloped with some of the accused and on missing her, her parents got up the story to recover her and to bring her paramour into trouble. Held that a conviction under s. 366 was improper. 6 Lah. L. J. 622=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 274. The mother of a Mahomedan minor girl handed her to the accused for marriage and the accused married her. The guardian for marriage of the girl did not consent to the marriage. Held, that the accused was punishable under s. 366 I. P. Code. 84 Ind. Cas. 434=26 Cr. L. J. 290=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 578. Where an abduction is not completed, the accused may be convicted of an offence of an abetment of abduction. 86 Ind. Cas. 1007=26 P. L. R. 119=26 Cr. L. J. 943=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 512. In the case of an offence under s. 366 I. P. Code, the intention is a matter of inference from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused after the abduction has taken place. 110 Ind. Cas. 99=10 A. I. R. 429. In the absence of any element of forcing or seducing for the purpose of illicit intercourse, no offence under s. 366, Penal Code, can be regarded as possible. 27 L. W. 683=109 Ind. Cas. 907=29 Cr. L. J. 635=A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 585=54 M. L. J. 456. The expression "seduced to illicit intercourse" means "induced to surrender or abandon on condition of surety from unlawful sexual intercourse". 38 C. W. N. 71; see also A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 164=1934 Cr. C. 1266: A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 227=1934 Cr. C. 458. Illicit intercourse does not cease to be one, merely because it is repeated. If the intention is to kidnap the girl in order to seduce her to illicit intercourse, the fact of previous intimacy with her is wholly immaterial. 27 A. L. J. 114=113 Ind. Cas. 765=30 Cr. L. J. 218=A. I. R. 1929 All. 82; but see A. I. R. 1934 Pat. 170=15 P. L. T. 229=35 Cr. L. J. 814; 38 C. W. N. 71. The words "seduced to illicit intercourse" do not refer to first act of seduction or surrender of chastity but they refer also to subsequent co-habitation as well. The object of the section is to punish not the seduction by itself but the kidnapping of the kidnapped. 1929 Cr. C. 379=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 651; see also A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 189; A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 209=50 L. L. J. 593=1930 Cr. C. 209=125 Ind. Cas. 656; A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 718; but see A. I. R. 1932 All. 409=1932 A. L. J. 488=54 A. 756=33 Cr. L. J. 669=138 Ind. Cas. 609. Act of seduction must be subsequent to kidnapping. A. I. R. 1932 All. 409. Proof of kidnapping or abduction from lawful guardianship is necessary. 34 Cr. L. J. 100=A. I. R. 1932 All. 580=1932 A. L. J. 776=141 Ind. Cas. 127; see also A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 62=34 Cr. L. J. 377=1933 Cr. C. 102=9 O. W. N. 1049=142 Ind. Cas. 813. Where a grown up girl of 18 submits herself to be carried away and 'raped' the presumption is of consent. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 401=1931 Cr. C. 641=32 P. L. R. 98=133 Ind. Cas. 560. For a conviction under this section it is not necessary that the accused should know definitely who the guardian of the minor girl is. 12 Mys. L. J. 133. In a charge under this section consent of the minor girl or of his temporary guardian is of no avail Ibid. Allowing a child to be in the custody of a servant or friend for a limited purpose or time does not determine the guardian's right to legal possession. Hence an offence under this section is committed when the minor is kidnapped with the consent of the servant or friend. 68 Ind. Cas. 620. Paternal relatives of a minor commit a technical offence under this section when they kidnap a minor girl from the custody of mother with the object of marrying her. 5 Lah. L. J. 377. To constitute an offence under this section the accused need not know who is the guardian of the minor. 81 Ind. Cas. 529=25 Cr. L. J. 1913. A person can not be convicted without a fresh charge for abduction where the original charge was for kidnapping. 31 C. W. N. 171.

Illicit intercourse.—A charge under this section, of abducting a woman with the intention of forcing or seducing her to illicit intercourse, can be sustained only by evidence to show the intent or to raise the presumption that illicit intercourse was likely to result from the abduction. 23 P. R. 1868.

The words "illicit intercourse" mean the sexual intercourse between a man and who are not husband and wife. The woman need not be a married one. 4 A. L. J. 482. Under the Buddhist law a man cannot marry a girl under sixteen years of age without her guardian's consent and hence an intercourse between the man and such a girl is "illicit intercourse" L. B. R. (1872-1892), 202. When it is proved that the accused took two minor girls from lawful guardianship with the object of seducing them to illicit intercourse, he is guilty of an offence under this section and the consent of the girl is of no avail. 49 C. 905. This section applies to the case of a married woman. 45 C. 641=24 C. W. N. 695.

Intent or knowledge.—For a conviction under this section a special intent or knowledge is necessary. 53 P. L. R. 1916 ; 28 Cr. L. J. 867=99 Ind. Cas. 121 ; 27 Cr. L. J. 456 ; 25 Ind. Cas. 297 ; A. I. Charge of rape.—A charge of rape against the accused cannot be proved by the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecution. 17 P. W. R. 1916 Cr. : 54 P. L. R. 1916 ; 73 Ind. Cas. 513 ; 1928 Lah. 238 ; 1924 Lah. 669=75 Ind. Cas. 986 ; but see 1923 Lah. 332 ; 1923 Lah. 91.

Cases.—99 Ind. Cas. 98=28 Cr. L. J. 66 ; 97 Ind. Cas. 960 ; 26 Cr. L. J. 1021.

Not a continuing offence.—The offence of kidnapping is not a continuing offence. When it is once complete, abetment cannot be proved against persons who have taken a subsequent part in the proceedings. 75 Ind. Cas. 297 ; 64 Ind. Cas. 842=23 Cr. L. J. 58=24 O. C. 329 ; A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 53=1931 Cr. C. 117. Offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not continuing offence but the offence under s. 366 is a continuing offence. A. I. R. 1931 All. 55=1930 A. L. J. 1485. Abduction is a continuing offence. Each fresh removal constitutes an offence. A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 328=12 O. L. J. 27=26 Cr. L. J. 695=86 Ind. Cas. 71 ; see also A. I. Legislative changes.—The words within quotations at the end of the section have been inserted by Act XX of 1923.

Separate offences.—Convictions under this section and section 363 are not maintainable. 93 Ind. Cas. 248=27 Cr. L. J. 456. Separate sentences can be passed under s. 376 and this section. 75 Ind. Cas. 77 ; 99 Ind. Cas. 344. Separate sentences are not maintainable for abduction for actual rape and abduction with intent to rape. 92 Ind. Cas. 850=1926 Lah. 212=27 Cr. L. J. 288. Kidnapping and abduction are distinct offences. 31 C. W. N. 940=45 C. L. J. 561=28 Cr. L. J. 805=104 Ind. Cas. 235=1927 Cal. 644.

Cases.—Under the Buddhist law, a man cannot contract a valid marriage with a minor without her parent's consent, and therefore, sexual intercourse without such consent is illicit intercourse within the meaning of s. 366, I. P. Code. U. B. R. (1897-1901). Vol I, 328. When a man kidnaps a minor girl from lawful guardianship and therefore co-habits with her without marriage, he has, subsequent to the kidnapping, seduced her to illicit intercourse, and he has kidnapped in order that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse, and he has committed an offence under s. 366, Penal Code, quite independently of any intention or consent on the part of the minor girl. I. U. B. R. 1902—1903, Penal Code, 15. Carrying off a woman by force is not an offence under s. 366, Penal Code, if there is no evidence that the intention was to marry her against her will or to enforce her to illicit intercourse or that it was known to be likely that any thing of the sort would result. 12 P. The substantial offence under s. 366 is abduction or kidnapping and not seduction in the sense of loss of chastity for the first time. 1930 M. W. N. 905=129 Ind. Cas. 463=A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 980. A case under this section does not apply to the case of a girl over 12 and under 16 years of age, who goes with a lover of her own free will, for the purpose of co-habitation. I L. B. R. 297 (F. B.). The offence of kidnapping is not a continuing offence, but is complete directly the minor has been taken from the keeping of the lawful guardianship. A. W. N. 1883, 67 ; A. W. N. 1883, 164. Section 366 is only an aggravated form of the offence created by s. 363 and where the girl kidnapped from lawful guardianship is under 16 years, the intention of the accused in kidnapping her is the material matter and not the consent or willingness or otherwise of the kidnapped girl. 20 S. The fact that Rakshasa form is in vogue among the gondas and the subsequent consent by the girl for the marriage cannot prevent the previous act of taking away the girl by force, having sexual intercourse with her, and renewal of her bracelets for preventing the girl going away from constituting the offences of wrongful confinement and robbery when they are committed and it does not even reduce their culpability, but under these circumstances there is no necessity for a heavy sentence. 103 Ind. Cas. 195=28 Cr. L. J. 659=A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 279. Seduction is not to be confined to the first connection with an unmarried girl. 98 Ind. Cas. 188=27 Cr. L. J. 1292=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 97. In a case under s. 366, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the abduction took place with the intention mentioned in the section, but then the intention can also be inferred from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily it is not possible for the prosecution to establish the intention except by proving the conduct. A girl of about 14 years was forcibly abducted by the accused. Held, that no inference except of the intention such as is mentioned in s. 366 is possible. 31 P. L. R. 388=123 Ind. Cas. 528=31 Cr. L. J. 529=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 52. The word "forced" in s. 366 can also be taken to be used in the ordinary dictionary sense as including forced by stress of circumstances. Also, though the word "seduction" is sometimes used to mean to induce a girl to part with her virtue for the first time the word as used in s. 366 should not be taken to have that narrow meaning but that even though a girl may have by the first act of seduction surrendered her chastity, subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse can also be taken to be included. 50 C. L. J. 593=1930 Cr. C. 209=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 209. This section is an aggravated form of s. 363. The consent of the girl does not exonerate the seducer. 120 Ind. Cas. 433=31 Cr. L. J. 85=1930 Cr. C. 35=A. I. R. 1930 All. 19. It is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of kidnapping and abduction to establish affirmatively the then intention with which a woman is abducted. But it is a fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in s. 366. 120 Ind. Cas. 606=131=1930 Cr. 366A. Whoever, by any means whatsoever, induces any minor girl under the age of eighteen years to go from any place or to do any act with intent that such girl may be, or knowing that it is likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The intention or knowledge that the minor girl abducted was to be forced to illicit intercourse is the gist of the offence under s. 366 A. 28 P. L. R. 260=102 Ind. Cas. 552=28 Cr. L. J. 584=8 A. I. Cr. 239. Legislative Changes.—This section was added by Act 20 of 1923 in order to give effect to the international convention for the suppression of the traffic in women and children signed at Geneva on behalf of the Governor-General in Council on the 28th day of May 1922.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions.

366B. Whoever imports into British India from any country outside India any girl under the age of twenty-one years with intent that she may be, or knowing it to be likely that she will be, forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person, and whoever with such intent or knowledge imports into British India from any State in India any such girl who has with the like intent or knowledge been imported into India, whether by himself or by another person, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

Legislative Changes.—Vide notes under s. 336 A.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions.

367. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any person in order that such person may be subjected, or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being subjected, to grievous hurt or slavery or to the unnatural lust of any person, or knowing it to be likely that such person will be so subjected or disposed of, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

368. Whoever knowing that any person has been kidnapped or has been abducted, wrongfully conceals or confines such person, shall be punished in the same manner as if he had kidnapped or abducted such person with the same intention or knowledge, or for the same purpose as that with or for which he conceals or detains such person in confinement.

Scope.—This section refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who had been kidnapped and does not refer to the kidnappers. 6 W. R. Cr. 17. Knowledge of kidnapping or abduction is essential. Knowledge means facts observed by himself or communicated by some body whose veracity is not doubted. A. I. R. 1932 Oudh. 28=1932 Cr. C. 60=8 O. W. N. 1325=136 Ind. Cas. 243. The withdrawal of a person from the actual observation of others by removal or otherwise is necessary to constitute the offence of wrongfully concealing a person kidnapped or abducted, the mere giving of false information about such person not being sufficient. 10 P. To constitute the offence, the concealment or confinement must be by person who knows of the kidnapping or abduction, and must also be wrongful. A concealment of one who has escaped from slavery or who endeavours to avoid his kidnappers who are in pursuit of him is no offence. This mode of abetment by aid is punishable as the substantive offence which is abetted. Morgan and Macpherson. The mere circumstance of a kidnapped girl staying in the accused's house for a day or two does not warrant the conclusion that she was wrongfully concealed with the object of baffling any search that might be made for her. 5 N. For a conviction under this section it must be proved that the accused concealed the girl or kept her in wrongful confinement. 27 Cr. L. J. 554=93 Ind. Cas. 1050.

This section refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who had been kidnapped and does not refer to the kidnapper. 97 Ind. Cas. 950=27 Cr. L. J. 1200. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st. class. (Vide 152 Ind. Cas. 550; A. I. R. 1935 All. 637).

369. Whoever kidnaps or abducts any child under the age of ten years with the intention of taking dishonestly any moveable property from the person of such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Where kidnapping was with intent to steal, a conviction under this section is proper. 13 Cr. L. J. 249=14 Ind. Cas. 601; see also 16 Cr. L. J. 167=27 Ind. Cas. 551.

Separate Sentences.—The offence described in s. 363 includes that which is described in this section and as such should not be punished separately. 8 W. R. 35 Cr.; see also 8 W. R. 84.

Procedure—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class.

370. Whoever imports, exports, removes, buys, sells or disposes of any person as a slave, or accepts, receives or detains against his will any person as a slave, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—By this section the sale or disposal of any person "as a slave", that is, on the pretext of his being in a condition of slavery, is made an offence. The clause extends not only to those immediately concerned in the contract of sale or disposal, but extends to those who aid them by knowingly conveying or removing the person who is the subject of the bargain, or knowingly receiving or detaining such person as a slave. This section in general prohibits the traffic in all human beings, whether children of tender years or adults.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Slavery.—Where a person transferred to another his rights over a girl of 13 years for 25 years, whom he described as her villati, held, that both were guilty under this section. 7 M. 227=1 Weir 354; see also U. B. R. (1897-1901). Vol. I, 337. But where a girl is bought or sold for purposes of marriage, no offence is committed under this section. 20 P. R. 1884; 19 P. R. 1867. If knowing that a girl had been kidnapped, the accused wrongfully confines her, and subsequently detains her as a slave, he is guilty of two separate offences under ss. 368 and 370. 3 N. W. P. 146. This section is only directed against attempts to place persons in the position of slaves, or to treat them in a way that is inconsistent with the idea of the person so treated being free as to his property, service or conduct in any respect. 2 A. 723. Keeping a woman against her will as a slave is an offence under this section. 16 W. R. Cr. 73; The purchase of a girl in a foreign territory, knowing her to be a slave, is not in itself an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and to make the importing of her into British territory an offence, it is necessary that it should appear that the accused imported her as a slave. 26 P. R. 1882 Cr. Slavery in s. 370 I. P. Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

371. Whoever habitually imports, exports, removes, buys, sells, traffics, or deals in slaves, shall be punished with Habitual dealing in slaves. transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section is for punishment of the slave-trader, who is habitually engaged in the traffic of buying and selling human beings. This section extends to masters of vessels and other persons who habitually aid the traffic by importing, exporting, or removing the subjects of it.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

372. Whoever sells, lets to hire, or otherwise disposes of any "person under the age of eighteen years with intent Selling minor for purposes of prostitution, &c. that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be,* employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation I.—When a female under the age of eighteen years is sold, or let for hire, or otherwise disposed of to a prostitute or to any person who keeps or manages a brothel, the person so disposing of such female shall, until the contrary is proved, be presumed to have disposed of her with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

Explanation II.—For the purposes of this section "illicit intercourse" means sexual intercourse between persons not united by marriage or by any union or tie which, though not amounting to a marriage, is recognised by the personal law or custom of the community to which they belong or, where they belong to different communities, of both such communities as constituting between them a quasi-marital relation.

Ingredients of offence.—The ingredients of an offence under this section are (1) that the minor sold or otherwise disposed of must be under the age of sixteen, (2) there must be a sale or other disposal, (3) it must be with the guilty intent described in the section. A. W. N. 1900, 133; 6 B. L. R. App. 34=14 W. R. Cr. 39; 35 M. L. J. 157=24 M. L. T. 77=19 Cr. L. J. 965=47 Ind. Cas. 865; A. I. R. 1934 All. 324=35 Cr. L. J. 571=1934 Cr. C. 408. In order to constitute an offence under this section there need not be a disposal tantamount to a transfer of possession or control over minor's person. 1 M. 164. The word "dispose of" has many meanings. It denotes inter alia "to bestow for an object or purpose, to make a change in the circumstances" it does not necessarily imply that there has been a transfer of possession nor do the terms "sell or hire" necessarily connote a present or immediate transfer of possession. Where a transfer of possession is contemplated, the offence is complete on proof of the sale or hiring without any proof of transfer of possession. 9 Weir 359 (F. B.). Where a minor daughter is dedicated in the service of a temple she becomes incapable of contracting a marriage. The change in the circumstances of the minor is a "disposal" within the terms of this section. Ibid; 15 M. 75=1 Weir 372; 1 M. 154; 16 B. 737; 6 B. H. C. R. Cr. 69; 15 M. 41; 15 M. 323; 1 Weir 364. Performance of a Gejje ceremony on a minor girl does not amount to her disposal within section 372. 21 Cr. L. J. 721=22 Bom. L. R. 894=58 Ind. Cas. 145. But where minor girls were being taught singing and dancing and were made to accompany their grandmother a dasi to the temple to take part in the ceremonies of the temple with a view to qualify them as dasīs, held, that the facts proved did not amount to a disposal under this section. 1 Weir 364. But the dedication of minor girls to the service of a temple and their registration as dancing girls amounts to such a disposing and obtaining as this section contemplates. 1 Weir 356; 24 M. L. J. 211; 12 M. 373. Where there was no proof that the accused knew that the girl was a married woman or was likely to be employed for a purpose which was both unlawful and immoral, held, that he could not be convicted under s. 372, Penal Code. 13 P. R. 1904 Cr.=1 Cr. L. J. 949=114 P. L. R. 1904. Where the accused by falsely representing that a girl belonging to a low caste belonged to a higher caste, induced a member of a higher caste to take her in marriage and to pay money for her to the accused, in the full belief that the representations were true, held that the accused had not committed offences under ss. 372 and 373. 2 A. 694 (F. B.). The offence made punishable by s. 372 is complete when the person intending that a minor should be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful or immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose, intentionally, places the minor in a position calculated to bring about the result intended or known to be likely. 7 Bom. L. R. 562=2 Cr. L. J. 500. Where the accused brought a young prostitute to a brothel at the request of the complainant for his supposed use for a single occasion, and where it was not contemplated that the girl should be sold or let out for a period of employment, or for the purpose of being employed by the complainant as a prostitute, or for the purpose of being disposed of by that person for that course of life. Held that the commission of an immoral act of sexual intercourse at an interview so brought about was not in the contemplation of s. 372, Penal Code. 21 C. 97. The performance of the ceremony of tying Talimani to a minor girl, worshipping a basin of water and distributing food does not come within the provisions of s. 372 of the Indian Penal Code. 27 Bom. L. R. 1022=89 Ind. Cas. 1050=26 Cr. L. J. 1482=A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 478. A mere direction or recommendation to a girl to live in a brothel, would not constitute a disposal within the meaning of section 372. The word "disposal" connotes some control by the person disposing, over the minor disposed of. Nor can it be a case of "selling or letting to hire of a minor" as there is no evidence of any passing of pecuniary consideration. 21 L. W. 472=86 Ind. Cas. 804=26 Cr. L. J. 868=48 M. L. J. 594=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 716. It is not requisite for the purpose of s. 373 that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with the intent that the minor shall be used for purpose of prostitution. 11 Pat. L. T. 341=A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 219.

Prostitution.—In the absence of any special custom it is unlawful for a guardian to enter into a transaction by which a minor may be transferred to another as his concubine. 1 Weir. 373. This section declares as a matter of general law, that no person under the age of majority, shall be devoted to a life of prostitution, nor employed in, nor used for, any unlawful or immoral purpose, nor placed in a position in which it is likely that such person will be employed in, or used for any such purpose. This rule, which is obviously suggested by the highest considerations of justice and morality, must control the exercise of all private law, even in those cases in which the private law assumes to vindicate itself on the serious plea of religion. 1 Weir. 359. The word "unlawful" in this section must be ejusdem generis with immoral. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 340. The offence of selling or buying a minor for the purpose of prostitution is committed even when the minor, prior to such transaction, has been leading an immoral life. 8 Bom. L. R. 236=3 Cr. L. J. 334. It may be regarded as settled law that the dedication of a minor girl to a temple in order that she might serve the temple as a dancing girl amounts to the disposal of the minor for the purpose of prostitution, especially where there is evidence of the kind of life that girls so dedicated have led. 1911, 2 M. Disposes of.—The word "disposal" shows that the person disposing has some control over the minor. 48 M. L. J. 503=86 Ind. Cas. 804. A change in the circumstances of the minor is a disposal. 1 Weir 359 (F. B.)

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Buying minor for purposes of prostitution. &c.

under the age of eighteen years with intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such person will at any age be" employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation I.—Any prostitute, or any person keeping or managing a brothel, who buys, hires or otherwise obtains possession of a female under the age of eighteen years shall, until the contrary is proved, be presumed to have obtained possession of such female with the intent that she shall be used for the purpose of prostitution.

* Substituted by Act 18 of 1924.

Explanation II.—'Illicit intercourse' has the same meaning as in section 372 *.

Scope and object.—The mischief against which this section is directed, is a trafficking in the prostitution or other unlawful and immoral use of minors. It is not intended to make punishable the buying, hiring or otherwise obtaining possession for a single act of sexual intercourse with the person so obtaining possession. 1 Weir, 377=5 M. H. C. 473. Possession in this section indicates possession with a power of disposal. It is something more than such possession as is obtained for the purpose of single act of sexual intercourse. 58 B. 498=151 Ind. Cas. 877=35 Cr. L. J. 1437=36 Bom. L. R. 379=A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 200. Possession need not be obtained from a third party. Possession can be obtained by stealing a minor girl with requisite intention. Ibid; see also A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 219=11 P. L. T. 341=125 Ind. Cas. 154. A prostitute received into her house two girls, one of them being of mature age, and promised to give the elder good clothes and ornaments if she lived with her. Held that from these facts it might be reasonably inferred that the accused obtained possession of the girls with intent that one or both of them should be employed for the purpose of prostitution, or knowing it to be likely that they would be so employed, and that, therefore an offence under s. 373, had been committed. 1 A. L. J. 559=1 Cr. L. J. 972. To constitute the offence under ss. 372 and 373, it is necessary that there should be a making over of possession of the minor girl either by sale or hire or by a similar arrangement. 35 M. L. J. 157=24 M. L. T. 77=47 Ind. Cas. 865=19 Cr. L. J. 965; see also 35 C. W. N. 316=33 Cr. L. J. 553=A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 417. It is not requisite for the purpose of s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code 1860, that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with the intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution. 22 Bom. L. R. 1234=45 B. 529=59 Ind. Cas. 141=22 Cr. L. J. 29. It is necessary for the prosecution to prove in a case under s. 373, i. P. Code, that the girl is under the age of 16 years. 26 C. W. N. 972=36 C. L. J. 152=(1922) Cal. 505. Where a minor girl was brought from Kashmir to Bombay by accused No. 2 and put in the brothel of accused No. 1, held (1) that the offences under ss. 373 and 114 I. P. Code were committed in Bombay and not in Kashmir. 101 Ind. Cas. 593=28 Cr. L. J. 465=29 Bom. L. R. 490. Section 373 of the Penal Code must be read in conjunction with the previous section 372 which is its counterpart. And the questions whether a person under eighteen has been brought and sold, hired and let to hire, disposed of and possession obtained are all in each case questions of fact for the jury and not of law to the judge. The law does not specify the nature of the possession nor its duration nor intensity. It merely specifies the object namely prostitution or illicit intercourse whether in each case the possession is such as to be consistent with the purpose or intention or knowledge of prostitution of illicit intercourse is the only proper test. 52 B. 403=112 Ind. Cas. 209=30 Bom. L. R. 613=29 Cr. L. J. 993=A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 336. If the accused is proved to have obtained possession of a female under the age of 18 years and is proved to be a person who occupies or manages a brothel, then he is presumed to have obtained possession of that girl with the intent that he shall use her for the purpose of prostitution. 30 P. L. R. 414=115 Ind. Cas. 65=30 Cr. L. J. 376; see also 35 C. L. J. 451=24 Cr. L. J. 104=71 Ind. Cas. 232. Proof of intention or knowledge must almost be entirely a matter of inference from circumstances. 24 Cr. L. J. 104=35 C. L. J. 45. Before an offence under this section can be established it must be proved (1) that a minor under sixteen years of age was bought, hired or otherwise obtained possession of by the accused, and (2) that the minor was bought, hired or otherwise obtained possession of by the accused with the intent that the same minor while under sixteen years of age shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or with the knowledge that it was likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen, will be employed or used for an unlawful or an immoral purpose. The offence would be, and is complete as soon as the buying, etc., by the accused and the guilty knowledge or intent on his part are proved, though the person bought may not enter upon prostitution until years after she had attained maturity, or may never enter upon such profession at all. 18 A. 24; see also 23 M. 159. It is not essential to the offence, under this section, that the buying, hiring or otherwise obtaining the possession of, should be from a third person. The language of the section is quite applicable to an agreement or understanding come to with the minor, without intervention of a third person, and the vice against which the section is directed is not of less enormity in the latter case. But to bring a case within the section, it is essential to show that the possession of the minor has been obtained under a distinct arrangement come to between the parties that the minor's person should be for some time completely in the keeping and under the control and direction of the party having the possession, whether ostensibly, for a purpose or not. 5 M. H. C. 473=1 Weir 377. This section is not applicable where the accused solicits a girl merely to have sexual intercourse with her. 7 N. W. P. 295. The words "otherwise obtains possession of" must be read together with the preceding words, and the accused is not punishable under this section for mere enticement. 11 C. P. L. R. Cr. 6.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session—Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

374. Whoever unlawfully compels any person to labour against the will of that person, shall be punished with Unlawful compulsory labour. imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Notes.—Compulsory labour is by various laws now in force permitted. Under the General Exceptions of the Code nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is justified by law. Where there is no law to justify it, the compelling of a person by force, or by threats which reasonably cause him to apprehend hurt or injury, to labour against his free will is an offence—Morgan and Macpherson; see also 19 C. 572; 5 W. R. Cr. 1. To make person work forcibly is not an offence under this section, where she was made over by her mother to the accused in consideration of certain amount of money. U. B. R. (1897-1901) 1. Vol. 337.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Of Rape.

375. A man is said to commit "rape" who, except in the case hereinafter excepted, has sexual intercourse with a woman under circumstances falling under any of the five following descriptions:—

First.—Against her will

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her in fear of death, or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband, and that her consent is given because she believes, that he is another man to whom she is, or believes herself to be, lawfully married.

Fifthly.—With or without her consent, when she is under "fourteen" years of age.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under "thirteen" years of age, is not rape.

Legislative changes.—Originally the word "ten" was used for the words "fourteen" and "thirteen" in the clause "fifthly." By Act 10 of 1891 the words were substituted by the word "twelve." Now the words "fourteen" and "thirteen" have been substituted by Act 29 of 1925.

Consent.—Sexual intercourse by a man with a woman without her free consent, i.e. a consent obtained without putting her in fear of injury, amounts to rape. 1 W. R. Cr. 21. Where there is consent of the girl no rape has been committed. A. W. N. 1884, 91; 12 Cr. L. J. 584=12 Ind. Cas. 848; A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 858. The fact that the girl was virgo intacta up to the date of occurrence is very strong proof of non-consent. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 613=26 Cr. L. J. 1488=89 Ind. Cas. 1056. In a rape case the question of consent does not arise where the girl is under fourteen years of age. 9 P. L. T. 186=29 Cr. L. J. 12.

Penetration.—To constitute rape penetration is sufficient. 19 P. R. 66 Cr. Valparaiso is sufficient for conviction. 1923 Lah. 536 ; see also 100 Ind. Cas. 116=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 735 ; 36 P. L. R. 35=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 797=1934 Cr. C. 1125.

Jurisdiction.—The offence of making a false charge of rape is triable exclusively by the Court of Session. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 953.

Exception.—18 C. 49.

Attempt.—A little boy of 12 years though physically incapable of committing the offence of rape can nevertheless be held guilty of an attempt to commit it. 42 Ind. Cas. 175 ; see also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 865. As regards attempt to rape, vide, 45 P. W. R. 1910 ; 1 Weir. 383 ; 103 Ind. Cas. 199=28 Cr. L. J. 663=1927 Lah. 580=28 Cr. L. J. 575 ; 100 Ind. Cas. 110=28 Cr. L. J. 244=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 222 ; A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 536=88 Ind. Cas. 705 ; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 100. Attempt to commit rape must be distinguished from preparation to commit rape and from indecent assault. A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 247=27 Cr. L. J. 916=96 Ind. Cas. 260.

The presumption of English law that a boy under 14 years of age is incapable of committing rape has no application in India. 37 A. 187=13 A. L. J. 254.

Wife.—Vide 18 C. 49.

Effect of amendment.—Notwithstanding any thing contained in this section sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife is not rape although the wife has not attained the age of thirteen years, if he was married to her before the 23rd September, 1925 and she had attained the age of twelve years on that date.—vide, s. 4 of Act 39 of 1925.

376. Whoever commits rape shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, "unless the woman raped is his own wife and is not under twelve years of age, in which case he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both."

Legislative changes.—The words within quotations have been inserted by Act 29 of 1925.

Conviction.—Conviction for the offence of rape on the uncorroborated testimony of the complainant would be most dangerous. 1924 Lah. 669 ; 23 Cr. L. J. 475.

Sentence.—The sentence depends upon the atrocity of the crime. 52 Ind. Cas. 413 ; 82 Ind. Cas. 142.

Cases.—The statement of a grandmother as to the child's complaint to her, is entirely insufficient to support a conviction, especially, in the absence of any medical evidence, establishing that the injuries to the child could only have been caused by rape or an attempt to commit the same. U. B. R. 1906, Penal Code 31=4 Cr. L. J. 288. Where a charge of rape brought against the accused was found untrue, held that, in the absence of a complaint from the husband the Court cannot, take cognizance of the offence of adultery. 14 Cr. L. J. 284=19 Ind. Cas. 716. Rape is an offence punishable with transportation for life or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 953. A little boy of 12 years though physically incapable of committing the offence of rape can nevertheless be held guilty of an attempt to commit it. 18 Cr. L. J. 1943=42 Ind. Cas. 175. An inference adverse to the accused in a case of rape should not be drawn from the fact that the complainant was very much ashamed and even committed suicide owing to the shame brought on her. The fact of the complainant's suicide should not be taken into consideration in giving sentence in case of rape because that is neither the natural nor probable consequence of the accused's act. 43 Ind. Cas. 443=19 Cr. L. J. 155. In cases of rape, it would be quite unsafe to convict individual merely on the accusation of the woman who had been raped. 67 Ind. Cas. 827=23 Cr. L. J. 475 ; 27 Cr. L. In a case of rape a direction that age or consent of girl need not be considered is a misdirection even where there is no plea of consent. 37 C. W. N. 484=1933 Cr. C. 970=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 606. Jury should be warned as a matter of practice that complainant's evidence should not be accepted unless corroborated by independent evidence. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 833. Where rape was committed on point of gun, sentence was enhanced from 3 to 5 years. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 483=33 Cr. L. J. 564=33 P. L. R. 679; see also A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 87=39 Cr. L. J. 618. Police officer should ask the complainant to submit to medical examination. 17 N. L. J. 189. In cases of rape, the punishment depends on the atrocity of the crime, the conduct of the criminal, and the defenceless state of the female. It has nothing to do with her status or nationality. 25 Cr. L. J. 1214=82 Ind. Cas. 142=1925 Nag. 74. If a girl is virgo intacta that fact affords proof against there being consent to the act. 89 Ind. Cas. 1065=26 Cr. L. J. 1488=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 613. Valvul penetration is sufficient. 88 Ind. Cas. 705=26 Cr. L. J. 1185=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 536. Where it is found that the girl upon whom rape has been committed was unchaste, a severe sentence should not be passed. 100 Ind. Cas. 128=28 Cr. L. J. 256; but see 100 Ind. Cas. 116=28 Cr. L. Where there is no mark of resistance on aggressor and no marks of injury on private parts of woman, a conviction on mere statement of woman is not proper. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 8. In a charge of rape by a woman the mere fact that she did not offer herself for medical examination cannot weigh against her. A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 69.

Where the accused stepped across from his own roof to that of his neighbour at night caught hold of his daughter, got on the charpoy with her, untied the string of her payjama and was seen struggling with her when the respondents came up in answer to her daughter's cries, and he then ran away. Held, that he had been rightly convicted under ss. 376 and 511. 28 P. L. R. 575=103 Ind. Cas. 199=28 Cr. L. J. 663=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 580. When in a prosecution for the offence of rape, it was found that the woman made the first information report only one day after the occurrence even though the police station was near at hand. Held, that under those circumstances, a conviction was not sustainable. 9 Lah. Where a person is charged with the offence of having committed rape the fact that the injured girl has not been infected with gonorrhoea from which the accused is suffering is by no means conclusive of the innocence of the accused. 106 Ind. Cas. 341=29 Cr. L. J. 12=9 Pat. L. T. 186. Crimes of violence upon women who are not in a position to defend themselves must be put down with a strong hand and it would be a very sad state of affairs, if criminals were to carry an impression that to criminally assault a woman or to rape her was not a very serious matter and that they could always satisfy their unholy passion if only they were prepared to undergo a comparatively short term of imprisonment. 30 P. L. R. 437=116 Ind. Cas. 883=30 Cr. L. J. 699=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 584. Where in a prosecution for rape it appeared that the complainant was never examined by any medical witness and apart from the statement of the complainant herself there was no evidence that the penetration was actually effected, held, that the accused who were proved to have committed criminal assault upon her should be convicted under s. 354 and not under s. 376 I. P. Code. Held also, that in such a case the report of the Chemical Examiner regarding the presence of semen on the complainant's clothing was not sufficient to prove that the complainant was actually raped. 11 Lah. L. J. 391=30 P. L. R. 662. The punishment for an offence of rape should be proportioned to the greater or less atrocity of the crime, to the conduct of the Criminal and to the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured females; and payment of money to the family should not be taken into consideration. 52 Ind. Cas. 423=20 Cr. L. J. 647. Uncorroborate testimony of woman is not sufficient. Evidence of resistance is a good guide to determine consent of woman. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 669=25 Cr. L. J. 74=75 Ind. Cas. 986; see also A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 836=28 P. L. R. 235=9 L. L. J. 111; but see A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 291=24 Cr. L. J. 877=75 Ind. Cas. 77; A. I. R. 1924 All. 411=46 A. 265=22 A. L. J. 162. Mere presence of semen on complainant's clothing is not sufficient to prove rape. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 193=11 L. L. J. 391.

In a prosecution for offences under ss. 366, and 376, I. P. Code the question of the age of the girl abducted is very material. The fact that she was a consenting party to the abduction is entirely immaterial as regards the offence under s. 366, though it may have some bearing as regards the offence under s. 376. 51 C. L. J. 352—A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 437. Where in a charge of rape, girl, her mother and eye witnesses depose in favour of prosecution convictions was held proper even in the absence of injuries on medical examination if blood stains are found in dhoti of accused and cloth of girl. A. I. R. 1935 All. 590.

Procedure.—If the sexual intercourse was by a man on his own wife—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session. In any other case—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Of Unnatural Offences.

377. Whoever voluntarily has carnal intercourse against the order of nature with any man, woman, or animal, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the carnal intercourse necessary to the offence described in this section.

Consent.—To establish an offence under this section, the consent of the party upon whom the offence is committed is quite immaterial. In re Mathuranath Ghose 1 J. G. 43. A mere filthy and indecent assault, without proof of attempted or intended penetration would not amount to an offence under this section. 1 Weir. 383; A. W. N. 1884, 25. A conviction can be safely based on the uncorroborated testimony of the boy, if it is not otherwise doubtful. 42 P. R. 1914 Cr; but see 73 P. L. R. 1918. It is doubtful whether the act of having connection with a woman in her mouth would amount to an offence under this section. 1 Weir, 382.

Carnal intercourse.—Coitus per os is an offence. 26 Cr. L. J. 945=1925 Sind. 286. Evidence to support charge under section 377 must be convincing. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 375=8 L. L. 180=27 Cr. L. J. 593=27 P. L. R. 353=94 Ind Cas. 257; A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 143=33 Cr. L. J. 900. Stains of semen make important evidence in sodomy. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 311=10 Lah. 794; 31 Cr. L. J. 343. The offence made punishable under s. 377 requires that penetration however little should be proved strictly. Thus an attempt to commit this offence should be an attempt to thrust the male organ into the anus of the passive agent. Some activity on the part of the accused in that particular direction ought to be proved strictly. A mere preparation for the operation should not necessarily be construed as an attempt. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 206. Where the accused was proved to have had carnal intercourse by placing his penis inside the nostril of a bullock held that he was guilty of an offence under s. 377. A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 261.

Cases.—A charge under s. 377, I. P. Code, should allege, the time when, the place where and any known or unknown person whom, the particular act charged as an offence under s. 377 was committed. 6 A. 204.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

Scope of the Chapter.—The offences defined in this chapter are made punishable on the ground that they are violations of the right of property. But the right of property is itself the creature of law. It is evident, that if the substantive law touching this right be imperfect or obscure, the penal law, which is auxiliary to that substantive law, and of which the object is to add a sanction to that substantive law, must partake of the imperfection or obscurity. If it be a matter of doubt what things are the subject of a certain right, in whom the right resides, and to what that right extends, it must also be matter of doubt whether that right has or has not been violated. For example, A, without Z's permission, shoots snipes on Z's ground, and carries them away; here if the law of civil rights grants the property in such birds to any person who can catch them, A has not, by killing them and carrying them away, invaded Z's right of property. If, on the other hand, the law of civil rights declares such birds the property of the person on whose lands they are, A has invaded Z's rights of property. If it be matter of doubt what the state of the civil law on the subject actually is, it must also be matter of doubt whether, A has wronged Z, or not.....As the substantive civil law varies, the penal law, which is added as a ground to the substantive civil law, must vary also—Morgan and Macpherson.

Of Theft.

378. Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft.

Explanation 1.—A thing, so long as it is attached to the earth, not being movable property, is not the subject of theft; but it becomes capable of being the subject of theft as soon as it is severed from the earth.

Explanation 2.—A moving, effected by the same act which effects the severance, may be a theft.

Explanation 3.—A person is said to cause a thing to move by removing an obstacle which prevented it from moving, or by separating it from any other thing, as well as by actually moving it.

Explanation 4.—A person who by any means causes an animal to move, is said to move that animal, and to move everything which, in consequence of the motion so caused, is moved by that animal.

Explanation 5.—The consent mentioned in the definition may be expressed or implied, and may be given either by the person in possession, or by any person having for that purpose authority, either expressly or implied.

Illustrations.

(a) A cuts down a tree on Z's ground, with the intention of dishonestly taking the tree out of Z's possession without Z's consent. Here, as soon as A has severed the tree in order to such taking, he has committed theft.

(b) A puts a bait for dogs in his pocket, and thus induces Z's dog to follow it. Here, if A's intention be dishonestly to take the dog out of Z's possession without Z's consent, A has committed theft as soon as Z's dog has begun to follow A.

(c) A meets a bullock carrying a box of treasure. He drives the bullock in a certain direction, in order that he may dishonestly take the treasure. As soon as the bullock begins to move, A has committed theft of the treasure.

(d) A, being Z's servant, and entrusted by Z with the care of Z's plate, dishonestly runs away with the plate, without Z's consent. A has committed theft.

(e) Z, going on a journey, entrusts his plate to A, the keeper of a warehouse, till Z shall return. A carries the plate to a goldsmith and sells it. Here the plate was not in Z's possession. It could not therefore be taken out of Z's possession, and A has not committed theft, though he may have committed criminal breach of trust.

(f) A finds a ring belonging to Z on a table in the house which Z occupies. Here the ring is in Z's possession, and, if A dishonestly removes it, A commits theft.

(g) A finds a ring lying on the high road, not in the possession of any person. A, by taking it, commits no theft, though he may commit criminal misappropriation of property.

(h) A sees a ring belonging to Z lying on a table in Z's house. Not venturing to misappropriate the ring immediately for fear of search and detection, A hides the ring in a place where it is highly improbable that it will ever be found by Z, with the intention of taking the ring from the hiding place, and selling it when the loss is forgotten. Here A, at the time of first moving the ring, commits theft.

(i) A delivers his watch to Z, a jeweller, to be regulated. Z carries it to his shop. A, not owing to the jeweller any debt for which the jeweller might lawfully detain the watch as a security, enters the shop openly, takes his watch by force out of Z's hand and carries it away. Here A, though he may have committed criminal trespass and assault, has not committed theft, in as much as what he did was not done dishonestly.

(j) If A owes money to Z for repairing the watch and if Z retains the watch lawfully as a security for the debt, and A takes the watch out of Z's possession, with the intention of depriving Z of the property as a security for his debt, he commits theft, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(k) Again, if A having pawned his watch to Z, takes it out of Z's possession without Z's consent, not having paid what he borrowed on the watch, he commits theft, though the watch is his own property, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(l) A takes an article belonging to Z out of Z's possession without Z's consent, with the intention of keeping it until he obtains money from Z as a reward for its restoration. Here A takes dishonestly. A has therefore committed theft.

(m) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent, for the purpose merely of reading it, and with the intention of returning it. Here, it is probable that A may have conceived that he had Z's implied consent to use Z's book. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(n) A asked charity from Z's wife. She gives A money, food, and clothes, which A knows to belong to Z, her husband. Here it is probable that A may conceive that Z's wife is authorized to give away alms. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(o) A is the paramour of Z's wife. She gives a valuable property, which A knows to belong to her husband Z, and to be such property as she has not authority from Z to give. If A takes the property dishonestly, he commits theft.

(p) A, in good faith, believing property belonging to Z to be A's own property, takes that property out of B's possession. Here, as A does not take dishonestly, he does not commit theft.

Essentials of offence.—To constitute the offence of theft the prosecution must establish (a) that there was dishonest intention to take property, (b) that the property, was movable property, (c) that it was taken out of the possession of another, (d) that it was taken without the consent of that other, and (e) that there was removal of the property in order to accomplish the taking of it. 54 Ind. Cas. 992.

Intending dishonestly.—The intention is the gist of the offence. There must be an intention to take dishonestly. 3 W. R. Cr. 2 ; 63 P. L. R. 1903 ; 2 Bom. L. R. 752 ; 5 M. H. C. Movable property.—Movable property only and no other description of property can be the subject of theft. Movable things which are of small intrinsic value become very valuable when they show a title to property or constitute the evidence of legal right. By what is written upon it the material may become a title deed or mortgage deed, or a bond, bill of exchange, promissory note, etc. Vide 72 Ind. Cas. 526=24 Cr. L. J. 417; 83 Ind. Possession.—"In theft, as it is here defined, the object of the offender always is, to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession. The Code does not admit a single exception to this rule. Morgan and Macpherson. Where in the presence of owner, a bullock follows a cow and disappears and is not found after search, the owner loses possession of it and there could be no offence of theft in respect of it. 18 Cr. But such removal is not theft where it was not proved that the swamp was so guarded by the Government as to enable the accused to know that it was the possession of the Government. 1 Weir. 412. An accused can be convicted for removing his own property where that property is in charge of a third person and for which the person is accountable. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 343. Where the complainant washed a carpet at the village tank and hung it up there to dry, the carpet was in the possession of the complainant. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 293. Even if a transaction be one of pledge between two parties, still, if the pawnee takes away the property pledged dishonestly without the knowledge of the pawnee, it is theft. U. B. R. No theft can be committed in respect of a property, where the owner has given up possession of it. 4 M. H. C. App. 30. An owner retaking property, which was illegally distrained, cannot be convicted of theft. 1 Weir. 422 ; 1 Weir. 421. Where the accused cut and removed certain crops under attachment in order to save them from being washed away, held, that the mere removal, without proof of dishonest intention would not constitute the offence. 1 Weir. 423. If a jointly owned animal is actually in possession of one co-owner, this circumstance alone would not be sufficient to bring the act of the accused within s. 378. The Act must be done dishonestly as defined in the code. 103 Ind. Cas. 847=28 Cr. L. J. 767=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 650. If a person extracts one of the papers from the file in the possession of another which the person extracting has been allowed to inspect he is guilty of theft. 7 Lah. L. J. 118=86 Ind. Taking away cattle by one co-owner from the possession of the other not dishonestly is not an offence. 103 Ind. Cas. 847=1927 Lah. 650=28 Cr. L. J. 767.

Husband and wife.—There is not the same union of interest between a Muhammadan wife and her husband which exists between an English husband and wife, and she can be convicted of theft or abetment of theft of her husband's property. 6B. H. C. Cr. 6. The intent with which the husband's property is removed is a question of fact, and where a dishonest conversion is intended, it clearly amounts to theft. 17 M. 401. But the removal by a Hindu wife of her stridhan property from the possession of her husband does not amount to the offence of theft. 8 B. H. C. Cr. 11 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 44.

Master and servant.—Servant taking away master's goods for unpaid wages without his consent commits theft. 28 Cr. L. J. 531=A. I. R. 1927 All. 470=102 Ind. Cas. 339.

Without consent.—An essential ingredient of theft is the taking of the property out of the owner's possession and without the owner's consent. Where a debtor gave certain property to the creditor upon the understanding that a debt was due from him to the accused, but subsequently he found out that the debt was a "time-barred" debt, held, that the subsequent knowledge could not change the fact, that at the time when the consent was given, it was a full and unqualified consent, and that the accused should not therefore, have been convicted of theft for retaining possession of the property. 1 A. L. J. 508. Where a servant, with the consent of his master, renders a person the assistance sought by him, in order to procure his punishment, the removal of the property by such person, with such assistance would not constitute the offence of theft, inasmuch as the owner has knowledge of the removal. 4 C. 366=3 C. L. R. 625.

Removal of property for taking.—Where crop was dishonestly cut and removed by the order of the accused, he himself being present ; held that the accused was guilty of an offence under this section. 43 Ind. Cas. 404=19 Cr. L. J. 404. The act of cutting the string by which a pass was fastened to a woman's neck and forcing the ends apart constitutes a sufficient moving to bring the act within the purview of this section. 29 P. R. 1917 Cr.=37 P. W. R. 1917 Cr. In order to constitute theft, it is sufficient if property is removed against his wish, from the custody of a person, who has an apparent title, even a colour of right to such property. 27 C. 501=4 C. W. N. 480. Where there is no proof of taking the property found in the possession of the accused he must not be convicted of an offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 143. Removal of property dishonestly, that is, with the intention of wrongfully depriving the owner of the possession thereof for however short a period, is theft. Rat. Un Cr. C. 908. Where the intention of the accused is not to convert the property to his own use or to make it his property permanently, no offence under this section has been committed. 11 C. 635. Theft of silver anklet from a child calls for a deterrent sentence because it very often leads to murder. 1930 M. W. N. 173. In theft the original takings is without honesty and without the consent of the owner. In criminal breach of trust the original taking is with honesty and with the consent of the owner. In obtaining property by cheating the taking is dishonest but with the consent of the owner. In criminal misappropriation the taking is honest but without the consent of the owner. 106 Ind. Cas. 678=29 Cr. L. J. 86=A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 113. But in a latter case it was held that to constitute the offence of theft it is not necessary that the taking should be permanent or with intention to appropriate the thing taken, or there should be wrongful gain to some one in addition to the wrongful loss to the owner, but there must be an intention to take the thing dishonestly. 25 C. 416=2 C. W. N. 347; 1 Weir. 417; 1 Weir. 419; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 399; 1 P. R. 1887; 1 Bom. L. R. 515.

Explanation 1.—If the property be attached to the earth, the mere severing is not theft. To constitute theft of any kind, there must be, as is noticed in the definition and hereafter, a moving of that thing after severance. The severance as such, only puts the thing into that condition in which a theft can be committed of it. In many cases things attached to the earth may be severed from it without being moved and then, if there be no subsequent moving, there is no theft. If indeed the same act which effects the severance, also effects a moving of the things as in the case supposed in the illustration, that moving is sufficient; but in many cases things attached to the earth may be severed from it without being moved: and then if there be no subsequent moving, there is no theft. Morgan and Macpherson. Where by the terms of the kabuliat it was provided that if the tenant cut any trees, he would pay to the landlord compensation at a certain rate and it was found that the tenant mala fide cut some trees in order to injure the landlord: Held that although the tenant was in the possession of the land he committed theft by severing the trees from the ground as they were in the possession of the landlord. 27 C. L. J. 228. Theft of the trees will be committed only when they were cut to remove them from the possession of the owner, and not when the cutting was merely to annoy him. 29 Ind. Cas. 672=15 Cr. L. J. 544. Where the trees are the property of the zamindar the tenant commits an offence under this section by cutting and removing them. 24 A. 53=17 A. L. J. 974; A. W. N. 1881, 73; see also 5 M. H. C. Aph. 36; 20 Bom. L. R. 572; 39 C. 758.

Earth, that is soil, and all the component parts of the soil inclusive of stones and minerals, severed from the earth, are movable property capable of being the subject of theft. Whoever, therefore severs such earth from the earth with the dishonest intention specified in this section can be said to commit theft. 13 B. 702.

Explanation.—(2).—The moving of a tree by the same act which effects its severance may constitute a theft. 1 Weir. 383=5 M. H. Cr. App. 36.

Summary procedure.—See 20 C. W. N. 1212.

Theft and similar offences.—Complainant must make out a prima facie case of any deterioration in value; unless such was made out there was no offence under s. 426 but under s. 379. 23 Cr. L. J. 504=2 Pat. L. T. 394=68 Ind. Cas. 40. In theft original taking is without honesty and without consent of owner; in criminal breach of trust it is with both. In cheating taking is dishonest but with consent of owner, and in criminal misappropriation it is honest but without his consent. A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 113=29 Cr. L. J. 86=106 Ind. An attempt to commit theft under this section is not punishable with whipping. L. B. R. (1872-1892.) 338. It is wholly illegal to punish a man for a grave offence, involving many totally different ingredients to a charge of theft, on a charge under this section. 16 Ind. Cas. 165. No offence under this section has been committed when the pledgee takes possession of the things pledged. 1 C. P. L. R. Cr. 100. When the accused was found in possession of two freshly flayed skins of a goat and kid within 24 hours of theft and was charged under s. 379 of the Penal Code. Held that it was absolutely necessary for the prosecution to establish that the skins found on the accused were those of the goats recently stolen. 16 Cr. J. 440=29 Ind. Cas. 72. Where the accused took a child of about four years outside the village, stripped him of his ornaments, and then, when the child threatened to tell his mother, beat him, held that the offence did not amount to robbery as defined in s. 390 of the Penal Code, though there was nothing to prevent the Magistrate from convicting the accused separately of theft and the causing of hurt under s. 235 para 1. 6 C. P. L. R. 36. Removal of attached property from the custody of another after his death by the judgment-debtor is an offence under this section. 8 A. L. J. 656=11 Ind. Cas. 142=12 Cr. L. J. 374. Where a crop, raised by the accused, was duly and properly distrained for arrears of rent and was in possession of a person, in whose custody it had been placed to secure the landlord's claim, and the accused removed it, in order to defeat the claim, held that the accused was guilty of theft inasmuch as he dishonestly removed property over which a lien was created by operation of law. 1 Weir. 420. Removal by one single act of several articles constitutes one offence of theft only, though the articles may belong to different persons. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 927=Cr. Rg. 33 of 1897. In order to sustain a conviction of theft or dishonest receipt of stolen property, it is not sufficient that the property found in the prisoner's possession was like that stolen. There must be a finding to the effect that the property was stolen. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 227.

Persons, who cleared a piece of Government land, cutting down and appropriating the trees thereon without permission, were convicted of theft under s. 379, I. P. Code, and of mischief under s. 425. Held, that the conviction was not illegal as the mischief preceded the theft, which under s. 379, Expl I, could not have been committed until the tree had been detached from the ground. 2 B. H. C. 392. The stealing of two bullocks belonging to two different persons at the same time, from the same custody, is only a single offence and should be punished only once. A. W. N. 1881. 154. Where the accused were entrusted with certain lands with the standing crops to be taken care of and they subsequently cut and disposed of the crops, they could be convicted under s. 379 I. P. The fact that a person has cultivated a certain land, contrary to a departmental rule of the Board of Revenue, could not justify a taking of the crops out of his possession by a party who had no right to it. 1 Weir. 426. Where a matter, not identifiable, such as rice, is found in the possession of a man, who is not able to explain the possession, or gives an account of it, which he does not prove, he cannot be convicted of theft unless the whole evidence is such as to exclude a reasonable hypothesis of his innocence of the offence. 1 Weir. 427=7 M. H. C. App. 19. Salt is an article, the identification of which in bulk is difficult, if not impossible. Where a quantity of wet salt from a cart in the vicinity of the house of the accused was lost, and the accused was found the next morning in the act of drying certain wet salt, held, that the accused could not be convicted of theft without sufficient evidence to identify the salt. 1 Weir. 429.

Theft of cloth, spread out on the top of a house by scaling the wall, is neither house breaking nor theft in house, but is simple theft. 1 Weir. 435. If a person trespasses on land in the possession of another and sows paddy on it, that does not entitle him to ownership to the paddy grown thereon and, consequently, if a person in possession of the land reaps and removes paddy resulting from such trespasser's sowing, he does not thereby commit theft. 3 L. B. R. 199=4 Cr. L. J. 464. A person who steals a bullock and has been sentenced for theft cannot again be convicted of mischief for slaughtering it, since the common ingredient of both offences, viz., "wrongful loss" has already taken place in the theft. 380. Whoever commits theft in any building, tent, or vessel, which building, tent, or vessel is used as a human dwelling, or used for the custody of property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Essential for the offence.—The essential point in the offence of theft in a building is that the property should be under the protection of the building and the offence may be committed by the owner of the building or other person who has lawful access to the building. Hence, there is nothing in the above section to prevent a person from being convicted under this section for a theft committed by him in his own house. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 367. This is an aggravated form of the offence mentioned in s. 279 and the culpability is not diminished by the presence of the owner. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 56. Where the presumption of theft arising from recent possession of stolen property is correctly raised, the inference should, where the property was stolen from a dwelling house, be an offence under s. 380 and not merely under s. 379 of the Penal Code. Causing disappearance of a document is an offence under this section. 16 Cr. L. J. 791=31 Ind. Cas. 647.

381. Whoever, being a clerk or servant, or being employed in the capacity of a clerk or servant, commits theft in respect of any property in the possession of his master or employer, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—Property is in the possession of the master or employer not only when it is in his actual manual possession but also when it is in the possession of a clerk or servant on his account. And a person employed temporarily, or on a particular occasion in the capacity of a clerk or servant, will it seems, come within the terms of his section, if the master buys goods and sends his servant to receive them and the servant dishonestly carries them away, he may, it seems, be punished under this section. The master has the possession of the goods, when they are received by the servant on account of the master and being thus in his possession, they are within the meaning of this Code, in the master's possession. Morgan and Maepherson. The mere fact of secret removal of an article does not prove dishonest intention. 5 Lah. 56=81 Ind. Cas 185; see also 41 C. 433.

Cas. 881.

Object.—It should always be borne in mind that, in the absence of extenuating circumstances properly established, larcenies by servants from their masters are aggravated forms of offences by reason of the relation between the parties, and are intended by law to meet with more severe punishment than mere ordinary theft. A. W. N. 1887, 54. In the absence of evidence to the ownership of stolen property, conviction under this section cannot stand. 16 Cr. L. J. 640=30 Ind. Cas. 464.

Abetment.—Vide 64 Ind. Cas. 510.

Cases.—Where no objection was taken before the trying Magistrate for the joint trial of a person under s. 411 with a person charged under s. 381, Penal Code, and the evidence was that the former was handling the stolen property only a few hours after the theft, held, that the joint trial of him with the person charged with theft had occasioned a failure of justice. 28 C. 10. In the absence of evidence as to ownership of stolen property, a conviction under s. 381, cannot stand. 16 Cr. L. J. 640=30 Ind. Cas. 464.

382. Whoever commits theft, having made preparation for causing death, or hurt, or restraint, or fear of death, or of hurt, or of restraint, to any person, in order to the committing of such theft, or in order to the effecting of his escape after the committing of such theft, or in order to the retaining of property taken by such theft, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Illustrations.

(a) A commits theft of property in Z's possession, and while committing this theft, he has a loaded pistol under his garment, having provided this pistol for the purpose of hurting Z in case Z should resist. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A picks Z's pocket having posted several of his companions near him, in order that they may restrain Z, if Z should perceive what is passing and should resist, or should attempt to apprehend A. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—Even though there is every reason to surmise that the accused were in a certain place for the purpose of committing theft this section requires that actual theft shall be committed. 1923 Lah. 512; 27 Ind. Cas. 434; 25 Cr. L. J. 386. A mere attempt to commit theft after such preparation for causing death or hurt etc. is not punishable under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson. 343. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Of Extortion.

383. Whoever intentionally puts any person in fear of any injury to that person or to any other, and thereby dishonestly induces the person so put in fear to deliver to any person any property or valuable security, or anything signed or sealed, which may be converted into a valuable security, commits "extortion".

Illustrations.

(a) A threatens to publish a defamatory libel concerning Z unless Z gives him money. He thus induces Z to give him money. A has committed extortion.

(b) A threatens Z that he will keep Z's child in wrongful confinement unless Z will sign and deliver to A a promissory note binding Z to pay certain moneys to A. Z signs and delivers the note. A has committed extortion.

(c) A threatens to send club-men to plough up Z's fields unless Z will sign and deliver to B a bond binding Z under a penalty to deliver certain produce to B, and thereby induces Z to sign and deliver the bond. A has committed extortion.

(d) A, by putting Z in fear of grievous hurt, dishonestly induces Z to sign or affix his seal to a blank paper, and deliver it to A. Z signs and delivers the paper to A. Here, as the paper so signed may be converted into a valuable security. A has committed extortion.

Theft or Extortion.—Extortion, like theft, belongs to that class of offences, into the definition of which the intention of causing wrongful gain enters. The dishonest intention to obtain property is common to both these offences; but in theft, the object of the offender is to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession, and it is a part of the definition that the offender's intention should be to take "without that person's consent". The offence of extortion is distinguished from theft by this obvious circumstance that it is committed by the wrongful obtaining of a consent and not without consent. It is distinguishable from robbery by this feature that the property is obtained by means of such fear of injury as does not amount to the fear of instant death or personal hurt which is part of the offence of robbery.—Morgan and Macpherson, 343. Where a person through fear, offers no resistance to the carrying off of his property, but does not deliver any property either to the prisoners or to any one else, the offence committed is robbery and not extortion. 5 W. R. Cr. 9.

Extortion, what constitutes.—According to this definition, the offence consists in intentionally intimidating a person by threats or otherwise, and thereby causing a dishonest transfer or delivery of property from such person to any other person. Morgan Macpherson, 344. In order to constitute the offence of extortion it is not necessary that the threat should be used, and the property received by the one and the same person. It may be matter of arrangement that the threat should be used by some and property received by others; and they would be all guilty of extortion. 2 B. H. C. R. 395. Delivery by the person put in fear is essential in order to constitute the offence of extortion. 5 W. R. Cr. 19. In order to come within this section, threat must be tortuous, and giving rise to civil action. 5 M. H. C. App. 14; 1 Weir. 438; 1 Weir 440. In cases of extortion dishonesty must be present. 1 Weir. 440; 1 Weir. 441.

Put any person in fear of any injury.—The wide interpretation of the word "injury" must be borne in mind; (See section 44). Whether a person has in fact been put in fear of injury is a matter which a Court must decide. The age, sex and situation of the person threatened may properly be taken into consideration. It seems necessary to constitute the offence that the persons threatened should be actually put in fear; upon the whole of the facts, however, if there is reason enough to say that similar circumstances would ordinarily excite fear in persons of the same age etc., as the person threatened, the Court will not too easily listen to the suggestions or evidence adduced to show that the passion of fear was not in truth aroused. Nor on the other hand, considering that the proof that he was put in fear will often mainly be the evidence of the person threatened, and that exaggerated if not false versions of the occurrence are not improbable, should the charge of extortion be considered as established without a cautious investigation.—Morgan and Macpherson, 345. The tenor of a criminal charge is fear of injury within the meaning of this section. Extortion, may be equally committed whether the charge is false or true. 7 W. R. Cr. 28. The making use of oral or supposed influence by member of a certain establishment to induce other members of that establishment to give him money against their will, threatening in case of refusal the loss of their situation, is extortion. 18 W. R. Cr. 17. Where there was no proof that any such fear of injury was caused as contemplated in this section, or that payment of money was induced thereby and it was shown that the accused might have demanded payment under bonafide claim of right held, that a conviction for extortion was not sustainable. 3 B. H. C. Cr. 45. The system of arrangement by which the villagers procure exception from certain public duties by the contribution of a settled quota in money is purely voluntary, and perfectly legitimate bargain among the villagers, and no offence is committed by the accused accepting the quota of money in consideration of their discharging those duties on behalf of the villagers. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 340.

To any other.—The injury which excites fear may be threatened to the person put in fear or to any other person. Elsewhere the expression usually is in similar cases “any person in whom he is interested.” The illustration (d) puts a threat to Z concerning Z’s child. But from the generality of the expression it seems that no tie of relationship is requisite. If in fact the fear of injury is excited, it matters not that another person, be he who may, is the supposed object of such injury. And it is not apparently essential that there should be a well-founded ground for apprehending that injury will be sustained by any person. For if a person is put in fear and if this is done not by accident or without design but intentionally, that part of the definition is fulfilled.—Morgan and Macpherson, 345.

Thereby induces the person so put in fear to deliver.—The essential ingredient in extortion is, that the offender dishonestly induces the person put in fear to deliver property. The Court must see sufficient reason to believe that in consequence of the putting in fear and in accordance with the intention of the offender, a dishonest transfer of property has been brought about that the delivery has caused by the threats, of a person who had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the person put in fear, or wrongful gain to himself or to some other person. The delivery of the property may be direct from the person threatened to the offender or to another person by his direction, or it may be by placing the property in some place of deposit, or by otherwise putting it at the immediate disposal of the offender. The subjects of extortion are, it seems, the same as the subject of theft, although the word “movable” is not used in the definition.—Morgan and Macpherson, 345.

Valuable Security.—These words have been explained in section 30. It is clear that any document which is denoted by these words may be the subject of the offence of extortion, even if it should be deemed not to be movable property, and therefore not to be included in the definition of theft.—Morgan and Macpherson, 346.

Picketing.—Realising fines by picketing is an extortion under this section. 25 Cr. L. J. 60; 20 A. L. J. 877; 45 A. 137.

If all that a man does is to promise to do a thing which he is under no legal obligation to do and to say that if money is not paid to him he will not do the same, this does not constitute an offence under this section. 46 A. 81=81 Ind. Cas. 609=25 Cr. L. J. 961=21 A. L. J. 850; see also 75 Ind. Cas. 542=24 Cr. L. J. 958=4 Lah. 179.

A nikah khawn is not bound to read a nikah for a person unless he chooses to do so and it is certainly no offence for him to demand any fee he takes for doing so. 4 Lah. 179. Promissory note executed by minor by force is valuable security. A. I. R. 1933. Pat. 601=1933 Cr. C. 1363.

Before a person can be said to put any person in fear of any injury of that person, it must appear that he has held out some threat to do or omit to do what he is legally bound to do in future. 21 A. L. J. 850.

384. Whoever commits extortion shall be punished with imprisonment Punishment for extortion. of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Criticism.—Notwithstanding the circumstances that there is something approaching to bodily injury (putting in fear of injury) in extortion, the punishment which may be awarded is not greater than for theft. The theft of a thing, that is, the taking of it dishonestly without consent, will not usually be an offence of such baseness as the extortion of it, that is, the causing its delivery by a person who consents to deliver it because he is put in fear and dares not withhold his consent. Extortion would appear, except from the wide range given to this offence by the expression “fear of injury” to be more grave offence and to deserve in its graver form a heavier punishment.—Morgan and Macpherson, 346.

Fear of injury.—The definition of extortion requires that the person should in fact be put in fear of injury and that the object (delivery of property etc.) should be accomplished. It must therefore be proved that the person was put in fear of injury, whether an injury of body, mind, reputation or property, to himself or another;—that the act by which this fear was excited was intentionally done by the accused person; that the property was delivered to the accused, or according to his direction to any other person or put in any place by his orders,—and that this was done “dishonestly”, as to which a strong inference will arise on proof of former matter that a dishonest intention existed.—Morgan and Macpherson, 347. See also 15 A. L. J. 127 : 32 Ind. Cas. 971; 28 A. L. J. 877. Threat to omit to do some act which accused is not legally bound to do is no offence. But threat held out by accused that he would not release cattle belonging to complainant unless he was paid some money for their release does amount to extortion. A. I. R. 1924 All. 197=46 A. 81=21 A. L. J. 854=25 Cr. L. J. 961=81 Ind. Cas. 609. Where offences under ss. 161 and 384 Penal Code are committed under colour or in excess of a duty imposed or authority conferred by the act they are not entitled to protection under s. 80 (3). A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 28=33 Cr. L. J. 298=25 S. L. R. 395. Conviction under C. 314 cannot be maintained when accused had no dishonest intention in removing property. 26 Pl. R. 97=26 Cr. L. J. 794=7 Lah. L. J. 12=86 Ind. Cas. 426.

Extortion and cheating.—Although there is a common feature between the offence of extortion and cheating yet they cannot be regarded as two aspects of one offence. A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 346=30 Bom. L. R. 967=29 Cr. L. J. 1082.

Robbery or extortion.—If it is doubtful whether a particular act of extortion amounts to robbery or not the offender may nevertheless be convicted upon a charge of extortion. For this and other section under the present head are not to be read, as if the words “unless the offence shall amount to robbery”, or any like words were added. The definition of the overt offence, extortion includes all cases which are within the definition of the cognate higher offence, extortion amounting to robbery. The offence does not cease to be extortion or to be punishable as such under this division, because it is shown that the extortion is of the kind which may amount to robbery. If the case is doubtful, the proper course is to convict the offender of the crime which, without doubt, he has committed, namely extortion and to punish him for it. In such a case there is no necessity for resorting to the provision in section 72.—Morgan and Macpherson, 347.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate of 1st or 2nd Class.

385. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts any person in fear, or attempts to put any person in fear, of any injury, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—A distinction between the inchoate and the consummated offence, is recognised. The attempt to commit extortion has proceeded so far towards completion that a person has been put in fear of injury, or that there has been an attempt to excite such fear; but the offence is incomplete because there has been no delivery of property, etc. The Court must be satisfied that the putting to fear is with the intention of extorting a delivery of property.—Morgan and Macpherson, 348. For the purpose of this section, it is necessary that the accused should have put some person in fear of injury in order to extort some property from him. “Injury” includes only such harm as may be caused illegally to a person's mind, body, reputation or property. 44 Ind. Cas. 973=19 Cr. L. J. 445. Further it must be one which the accused could himself inflict or cause to be inflicted. 48 M. L. J. 190=28 Cr. L. J. 755; 86 Ind. Cas. 339. This section does not expressly provide for the punishment of an attempt at extortion. 98 Ind. Cas. 60=27 Cr. L. J. 1213=A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 89. In order to constitute an offence under s. 385 it is not necessary that the threat should be of some conduct which might either constitute an offence in criminal law or which might be made the basis of a civil action for damages. 9 Pat. 725=A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 593.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

386. Whoever commits extortion by putting any person in fear of death or of grievous hurt to that person or to any other shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—Some of those things which come within the definition of "extortion" are distinguished by a description from the remainder, and a more severe punishment is provided for them. These are extortions by putting in fear of death or of grievous hurt. Such extortion is not robbery, unless the offender is at the time of committing it in the presence of the person put in fear and the fear is of instant death, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson, 348.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

387. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts or attempts to put any person in fear of death or of grievous hurt to that person or to any other, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The attempt to commit the aggravated extortion made punishable by the preceding section, is here punished. Morgan and Macpherson, 348. The feigning of an attempt to commit suicide in order to extort money is an offence under this section. 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 423. Vide 6 L. B. R. 160=16 Ind. Cas. 167; 17 Ind. Cas. 800.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

388. Whoever commits extortion by putting any person in fear of an accusation against that person or any other, of having committed, or attempted to commit, any offence punishable with death, or with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, or of having attempted to induce any other person to commit such offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offence be one punishable under section 377 of this Code, may be punished with transportation for life.

Scope.—Here as in s. 386, a heavier punishment is provided for extortion, when it is committed with certain circumstances of aggravation. The expression "in fear of an accusation" probably applies to threats of charging a person falsely before a judicial tribunal or some public authority with the commission of an offence.—Morgan and Macpherson 349.

Offence.—The word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under the Code, or under any special or local law as defined in ss. 41 and 42 of the Code, See s. 40 supra.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

389. Whoever, in order to the committing of extortion, puts, or attempts to put any person in fear of an accusation, against that person or any other, of having committed, or attempted to commit, an offence punishable with death or with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offence be punishable under section 377 of this Code, may be punished with transportation for life.

Of Robbery and Dacoity.

Robbery.

390. In all robbery there is either theft or extortion.

Theft is "robbery" if, in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away, or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end, voluntarily causes, or attempts to cause, to any person death, or hurt, or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death, or of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint.

Extortion is "robbery" if the offender, at the time of committing the extortion, is in the presence of the person put in fear, and commits the extortion by putting that person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint to that person, or to some other person, and, by so putting in fear, induces the person so put in fear then and there to deliver up the thing extorted.

Explanation.—The offender is said to be present if he is sufficiently near to put the other person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

Illustrations.

(a) A holds Z down, and fraudulently takes Z's money and jewels from Z's clothes, without Z's consent. Here A has committed theft and in order to the committing of that theft, has voluntarily caused wrongful restraint to Z. A has therefore committed robbery.

(b) A meets Z on the high road, shows a pistol, and demands Z's purse. Z, in consequence, surrenders his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z by putting him in fear of instant hurt, and being at the time of committing the extortion in his presence. A has therefore committed robbery.

(c) A meets Z and Z's child on the high road. A takes the child, and threatens to fling it down a precipice, unless Z delivers his purse. Z, in consequence, delivers his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z by causing Z to be in fear of instant hurt to the child who is there present. A has therefore committed robbery on Z.

(d) A obtains property from Z by saying—"Your child is in the hands of my gang, and will be put to death unless you send us ten thousand rupees." This is extortion, and punishable as such; but it is not robbery, unless Z is put in fear of the instant death of his child.

Robbery.—The offence of robbery is distinct from theft or extortion, but in every robbery, either the offence of theft or the offence of extortion will be committed. It must not be supposed that what is robbery cannot be, or ceases to be, extortion or theft. The line of separation is drawn not between the offence of robbery and the offence of extortion, but between extortion which is robbery and extortion which is not robbery. There is in like manner a line of separation, not between theft and robbery but between the theft which is robbery and the theft which is not robbery.—Morgan and Macpherson. 350. The Indian Law Commissioners observe that "in practice it will perpetually be a matter of doubt whether a particular act of robbery was a theft or an extortion. A large proportion of robberies will be half theft and half extortion. A seizes Z, threatens to murder him, unless he delivers all his property and begins to pull off Z's ornaments, Z in terror begs that A will take all he has, and spare his life, assists in taking off his ornaments and delivers them to A. Here such ornaments as A took without Z's consent are taken by theft. Those which Z delivered up from fear of death are acquired by extortion. It is by no means improbable that Z's right arm bracelet may have been obtained by theft, and left arm bracelet by extortion; that the Rupees in Z's girdle may have been obtained by theft, and those in his turban by extortion. Probably in nine-tenths of the robberies which are committed something like this actually takes place, and it is probable that a few minutes later neither the robber nor the person robbed would be able to recollect in what proportions theft and extortion were mixed in the crime, nor is it at all necessary for the ends of justice that this should be ascertained. For though in general the consent of a sufferer is a circumstance which very materially modifies the character of the offence, and which ought therefore to be made known to the Courts, yet the consent which a person gives to the taking of the property by a ruffian who holds a pistol to his breast is a circumstance altogether immaterial."

It is not necessary that the extortion should follow immediately upon the restraint in order to constitute robbery, provided that there is fear or restraint at the time. 99 Ind. Cas. 596=25 L. W. 86=28 Cr. L. J. 164=A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 307. The essence of a charge of dacoity or robbery is the animus ferandi. 1929 M. W. N. 185. "Restraint" implies abridgment of the liberty of a person against his will. Where he is deprived of his will power by sleep or otherwise he cannot while in that condition be subject to any restraint. 29 P. L. R. 90=109 Ind. Cas. 682=29 Cr. L. J. 602=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 445.

When theft is robbery.—Theft aggravated by actual or attempted violence, as by causing fear of violence, is robbery. Whether this aggravation proceeds the commission of the theft or accompanies it, or follows, it, if the end in view be theft, the offender has committed the kind of theft which is robbery. But the definition requires violence (actual or attempted) or a causing of fear of present instant death or violence.—Morgan and Macpherson, 351; 1 Weir 442. And the violence or fear whether it is offered or caused to him whose property is stolen or to another, must immediately be connected with the theft. If A is carrying away stolen property from the place of theft and meets upon the road and hurts a police officer or private person who suspects and desires to detain him, this does not make his offence of theft a robbery; but he commits a distinct offence, Morgan and Macpherson, 351. Dishonest intention is the main ingredient in a robbery. 5 M. H. C. App. 39: see also A. I. R. 1933 All. 620=1933 Cr. C. 992=1933 A. L. J. 917. Grievous hurt when inflicted during theft, makes it robbery. 6 W. R. Cr. 85. Theft becomes robbery, when in the course of committing it, there is an intention and an attempt to cause hurt. 5 W. R. Cr. 45. In order that theft may amount to robbery hurt must be caused for committing theft and must be quite separate and distinct from act of theft. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 407. Thief attacking pursuers after having stolen property is not guilty of robbery. 19 Cr. L. J. 27=42 Ind. Cas. 987. In case of murder during retreat after dacoity, all members of a gang is liable for punishment. 12 Cr. L. J. 687=2 Lah. 275=63 Ind. Cas. 623. Theft is robbery under various conditions which do not involve the causing of hurt. The theft may be robbery, because in committing the theft, the offender attempts to cause hurt, or causes wrongful restraint, or fear of death, hurt or wrongful restraint. 1 L. B. R. 232. To constitute the offence of robbery it is necessary that death or hurt or wrongful restraint or fear of such instant evils should be caused by the offenders not only in order to committing of the theft or in carrying away property obtained by the theft but also for that end. "For that end" does not mean "in those circumstances". 38 Ind. Cas. 730; see also 12 P. R. 1896 Cr.; 1 Weir 446.

When extortion is robbery.—Extortion aggravated by causing fear of instant death, etc. is robbery. The definition requires, and the expression "instant death" etc., implies, the presence of the person who is put in fear. The explanation and the illustrations (c) and (d) mark the distinction thus made between the extortion which is robbery and the extortion which is not robbery.—Morgan and Macpherson, 352. It is necessary to convict accused of robbery, that hurt or wrongful restraint should have been caused for effecting theft. 1930 M. W. N. 1142.

391. When five or more persons conjointly commit, or attempt to commit a robbery, or, where the whole number of persons, conjointly committing or attempting to commit a robbery, and persons present and aiding such commission or attempt, amount to five or more, every person so committing, attempting or aiding, is said to commit "dacoity".

Dacoity.—This word "dacoity" (gang robbery) is used in the Bengal and Madras Regulations, and is retained in the Code for the purpose of denoting not only actual gang robbery, but the attempting to rob when such an attempting is made or aided by a gang.—Morgan and Macpherson, 352. In a case of dacoity, the Judge should direct the jury to convict only if they find that all the prisoners had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the prosecution or wrongful gain to themselves. W. R. 1864 Cr. The offence of robbery cannot be converted into dacoity, where there is simple allegation but not adequate proof on the part of the prosecution that five or more persons have taken part in committing or attempting to commit the crime. 26 P. W. R. 1915 Cr.=15 Cr. L. J. 634=30 Ind. Cas. 458. Where there were six robbers of whom three were acquitted, and the rest were convicted of dacoity under s. 391, I. P. Code, and where the Sessions Judge nowhere, in his charge to the jury directed their attention to the evidence as to the number of the robbers so as to show that there were five or more offenders and that the offence amounted to dacoity, held that the conviction under s. 391 was not sustainable and the same case altered into one for robbery under s. 392. 7 M. L. T. 340=5 Ind. Cas. 797=11 Cr. L. J. 249=1910 M. W. N. 52.

The definition of dacoity in this section is so wide as to extend to what would have been treated as cases of plunder under the old law. 3 W. R. Cr. 60. However erroneous a claim of right may be, if in fact the conduct of the accused was solely induced by a bonafide belief in such claim, a charge of robbery cannot be maintained. 1 Weir. 443=3 M. H. C. 264. Three known persons were charged with dacoity along with two other unknown men. The jury acquitted one of the three and convicted the other two of the offence of dacoity. Held, that it was quite open to the jury, while holding that one of the accused who was supposed to have been known to the witnesses had not been properly identified, to find that the total number of dacoits was five. 1927 M. W. N. 853=53 M. L. J. 732. Where three out of six men were acquitted, a conviction under this section is not maintainable. 39 A. 848; 28 Cr. L. J. 547; 11 Cr. L. J. 249. In a dacoity, theft must have been perpetrated by actual violence or threatened violence. 10 Bom. L. R. 632; see also 38 Ind. Cas. 730; 18 Cr. L. J. 346; 6 C. W. N. 72; 5 C. W. 762. 392. Whoever commits robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if the robbery be committed on the highway between sunset and sunrise, the imprisonment may be extended to fourteen years.

Punishment.—Under this section a sentence of imprisonment is quite essential and hence a mere sentence of fine is illegal. 44 A. 538=20 A. L. J. 388. In cases of robbery the legislature has provided three different degrees of punishment which may be inflicted under this section. The punishment may be extended to fourteen years' imprisonment under s. 394 to transportation for life and under s. 397 the imprisonment cannot be for less than seven years. This section is a general section and the two other sections specify the same offence under aggravated circumstances. 1 Weir, 448. Where the accused committed house-breaking in the house of the complainant and abstracted from it a chamber and when the complainant attempted to catch him and recover his property, the accused in order to carry away this property caused him hurt. Held that the accused committed offence under ss. 457, 392 and 394. 21 L. Where the accused an ex-convict has been charged with an offence under s. 392, read with s. 75, the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment inflicted upon him is by no means too severe. 35 Cr. L. J. 566=11 O. W. N. 202=A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 122.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

393. Whoever attempts to commit robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—A present intention to rob combined with an act in execution of such intention which falls short of the offence intended is an attempt to rob. The attempt should be proved by some act which is a commencement of the execution of the purpose, or which in the judgment of the court sufficiently manifests the intention of the accused. If the proof should show not merely an attempt to rob, but that the offence of robbery has been committed, or if it is uncertain whether the offence is robbery or only an attempt to rob, the accused may nevertheless be convicted under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson, 354. In a charge and finding under s. 398, the substantive s. 398 should be mentioned as well as the supplementing section 398. Charges under ss. 393, 394 and 397 cannot be joined unless they form part of the same transaction. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 512=1933 Cr. C. 771=34 P. L. R. 498=34 Cr. L. J. 402.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

394. If any person, in committing, or in attempting, to commit robbery, voluntarily causes hurt in other person jointly concerned in committing, or attempting to commit, such robbery, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The offence of robbery or of attempting robbery is aggravated by hurt. The guilty act of one is imputed to all who are joined with him, provided the act is done in committing the offence of robbery. Violence or hurt entirely unconnected with that offence or used to gratify a personal spite or passion is not contemplated; as if one of the robbers should commit murder or rape, while the others are occupied with plundering or searching for property. To support this charge, there should be proof of the robbery or attempt, and of the hurt; that the hurt was caused voluntarily, that is, not accidentally but intentionally or knowingly, may fairly be presumed in the absence of any circumstances to show that it was accidental.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Jurisdiction.—A Magistrate, having jurisdiction to try a prisoner for an offence under this section has not his jurisdiction taken away by the mere fact that the prisoner might also have been charged under s. 397. 1 Weir 449.

Doubt.—If there is an element of doubt as to the identification of the accused in a robbery, the accused should be given the benefit of the doubt and the conviction and sentence should be quashed and set aside. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. 1, 245; see also A. I. R. 1935 All. 549.

An offence under this section cannot be said to be a minor offence so far as dacoity is concerned. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 207. A sentence of whipping can be passed where the robber has himself caused hurt. 1928 Rang. 112. Where in a robbery two persons out of four-armed with weapons committed murder, each is guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 63=26 Cr. L. J. 1406=89 Ind. Cas. 718. Consecutive sentences under ss. 394 and 397 are illegal. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 47=26 Cr. L. J. 1350=89 Ind. Cas. 390.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

395. Whoever commits dacoity shall be punished with transportation for life or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Proof.—It will be borne in mind that this offence as defined does not always involve robbery. The proof should be of a robbery or attempt to rob by five or more persons who are either joint actors, or some of whom actually commit the robbery etc., while the others are abettors, being present but not actually participating in the commission of robbery or the attempt to rob—Morgan and Macpherson 355. An offence under this section can be committed if the number of persons concerned in the robbery is not less than five. 6 Lah. 24=26 P. L. R. 139=88 Ind. Cas. 513=26 Cr. L. J. 1153.

Recent possession of dacoited property.—The recent possession of property stolen at dacoity even when there is no evidence identifying him as one present at the dacoity will, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary give rise to the presumption that the accused participated in it. 1 O. C. 1. See also A. W. N. 1898, 203; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 312.

Punishment.—Under this section, a sentence of transportation for life can be passed, or, by applying s. 59, a sentence of transportation from seven to ten years can also be passed; but a term of transportation, between ten years and life, does not seem to be legal 4 Cr. L. J. 385. Where dacoity is committed with cruelty additional sentence of whipping is appropriate. A. I. R. 1921 All. 408=22 Cr. L. J. 397=19 A. L. J. 610=61 Ind. Cas. 525; see also 21 Cr. L. J. 515=56 Ind. Cas. 771.

Section 398.—Where the accused are charged and convicted of an offence punishable under this section they cannot be punished under s. 398—Rat. Un. Cr. C. 921.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Cases.—Where the sole evidence against a person charged with an offence under section 395, Penal Code, consisted of the fact that the accused had pointed out the place where some remains of the stolen property were found: Held that the above circumstantial evidence was not sufficient to show that the accused had committed the offence in as much as it did not exclude other thieves compatible with his innocence. 15 Cr. L. J. 404=23 Ind. Cas. 1004. In cases of dacoity the Judge should explain to the jury with sufficient clearness that, unless they are satisfied that there were five or more persons committing the robbery or that the persons present and aiding in the commission of the robbery numbered five or more persons, there could be no dacoity. 1 Weir 446=2 Weir 519. 396. If any one of five or more persons, who are conjointly committing dacoity, commits murder in so committing Dacoity with murder. dacoity, every one of those persons shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—In enacting this section it is the intention of the Legislature that the sentence of death should sometimes be inflicted on person convicted of taking part in a dacoity, in the course of which a murder is committed, even though there is nothing to show that he himself committed the murder or that he abetted it within the meaning of s. 107, or that he even knew that it was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common objects of his comrades. 4 C. P. L. R. 1 Cr. Murder committed by dacoits, when they were engaged in carrying off the stolen property, is murder is committed while they were engaged in committing dacoity and is therefore, punishable under this section. 17 M. The first essence of an offence under this section is that the dacoity is the joint act of the persons concerned, and the second essence is that the murder is committed in the course of the commission of the dacoity in question. The essence of the offence of robbery referred to in ss. 395 and 396 is that the offender for the purpose of committing theft, or carrying away or attempting to carry away properties obtained by theft, voluntarily causes or attempts to cause to any person death, hurt or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint. 5 C. 397. If, at the time of committing robbery or dacoity, the offender uses any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt to any person, or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, the imprisonment with which such offender shall be punished, shall not be less than seven years.

Scope.—This section applies only to the case of a person, who, in committing robbery and dacoity, actually used any deadly weapon, or causes grievous hurt. It is not applicable to the case of persons, who are associated with him in committing robbery or dacoity, and who do not use any deadly weapon or cause grievous hurt. 1 Weir 450=2 Wier 515. Attempt to commit robbery or dacoity when armed with deadly weapon.

Scope.—To support a conviction under this section, it is necessary to prove that at the robbery the accused was armed with a deadly weapon, and not merely that one of the robbers who was with the accused at the time carried one. Rat Un. Cr. C. 797; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 921; 11 Ind. Cas. 1004; 23 A. 78; 6 L. B. R. 41; 1923 Lah. 66. Section 398 I. P. Code does not create any substantive offence. 399. Whoever makes any preparation for committing dacoity, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Making preparation to commit dacoity.

Scope.—In order to commit the offence of preparation, it is not necessary that the prisoners should have done an overt act towards the commission of the dacoity. What the law contemplates is that they should have done some act to get ready for a dacoity, and the collection of men from different village, coupled with the collection of arms, sufficiently proves the required preparation. The mere assemblage to commit dacoity does not amount to preparation, but when it is found, that the members of the gang had taken, into their possession instruments of house-breaking and arms for the offensive and defensive purposes and they actually proceeded to a place near the scene of contemplated dacoity, an offence under this section has been completed. 6 P. R. 1916 Cr.=34 Ind. Cas. 1000. The offences of commission of dacoity, preparation for it and assemblage for the same purpose, have this in common, that they presume an intention or agreement to commit dacoity by five or more persons. A mere assembly without further preparation is not a preparation within the meaning of this section, for if it were, s. 402 would be redundant. 41 C. 350=18 C. W. N. 498. See also, 71 Ind. Cas. 360; 81 Ind. Cas. 168; 22 A. L. J. 1028. The mere "assemblage" to commit dacoity does not amount to "preparation" within the meaning of s. 392, Penal Code. 9 Lah. 550=109 Ind. Cas. 593=29 Cr. L. 400. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

What constitutes offence.—In order to sustain a conviction under this section, evidence must be forthcoming that there was a gang of persons, that they were associated together and that such association was for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity and robbery. 1 C. W. N. 146 ; 27 C. 139=4 C. W. N. 97. The associating and purpose of association may be proved by direct evidence, viz. that the accused met, and determined to join together for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity. In the absence of direct evidence, the associating and purpose of association may be established by proof of facts from which they may be reasonably inferred. 32 M. 179 ; 83 Ind. Cas. 683. For an offence under this section something more than a casual association is necessary. The section involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connection with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with in band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity. 63 Ind. Cas. 455.

Scope.—To support a conviction under this section it is necessary to prove (i) that a gang of dacoits existed and (2) that the accused belonged to that gang. It is not sufficient to prove that the accused repeatedly gave shelter and assistance to the dacoits. 1 Bom. L. R. 156 ; A. W. N. 1885, 65 ; 18 P. L. R. 1910 Cr.=6 Ind. Cas. 492 ; 23 W. R. Cr. 18. There are many points which have to be considered in determining what is an adequate sentence to pass upon an accused convicted of an offence falling under s. 400 I. P. Code. Among these may be noted the following :—
(i) how long has the accused belonged to the gang ; (ii) what dacoities have been committed by the gang since the accused joined it ; (iii) in how many of these dacoities did the accused actually take part ; (iv) what are the character of the dacoities in which the accused actually took part. Whether they were accompanied with murder, culpable homicide, grievous hurt, torture, or with any acts of a specially brutal character, or were they only dacoities of ordinary character. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 441. The term "belong" in this section implies something more than the idea of casual association ; it involves the notion of continuity and indicates more or less intimate connection with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity. 1930 Cr. C. 1079=A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 455 ; 110 Ind. Cas. 440=19 Cr. L. J. 705=47 C. L. J. 471. 7 Ind. Cas. 1012. It is not necessary for a conviction under this section that the person convicted must have taken part in any dacoity. Ibid. The evidence as to prior criminal proceedings against the accused which resulted in one acquittal cannot be relied on where the accused is again charged for the same offence but that same can be relied on where the latter proceeding relates to a totally different offence. 5 O. W. N. 760=112 Ind. Cas. 337=A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 430. Evidence respecting commission of offence and proceedings under s. 110 Cr. Pro. Code are admissible. A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 872=52 C. 525=26 Cr. L. J. 1037=42 C. L. J. 501=87 Ind. Cas. 925. Where the the accused is charged under s. 400 I. P. Code evidence of previous conviction is admissible as evidence to prove habit and association. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 455=128 Ind. Cas. 739. The offence contemplated in this section is one of a very special character and entirely the creature of statute and should therefore be strictly construed. Association for the habitual pursuit of dacoity is the gist of the offence. Although the evidence need not show the same degree of particularity as to the commission of each dacoity as is required to support a substantive charge of that crime, it must be established, for the purpose of conviction under the section, that the accused belong to a gang whose business is the habitual commission of dacoity. The special conspiracy must be proved. 16 C. W. N. 69 ; see also 65 P. L. R. 1911 ; 17 Ind. Cas. 1006 ; 1 Bom. L. R. 15 ; 1 C. W. N. 146 ; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 441. The mere fact that some women are the mistresses of dacoits does not render them liable also as dacoits. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 863. A conviction can had under this section even when no actual commission of dacoity is proved. The element of the offence is association with the knowledge that it is formed for the purpose of committing dacoities habitually. Hence where sentence is already passed for the offence of committing dacoity there is no bar to the passing of a sentence under this section. 27 O. C. 385=89 Ind. Cas. 836=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 374 ; see also 23 A. L. J. 18=86 Ind. Cas. 282 ; 52 C. 595=42 C. L. J. 501 ; 26 Cr. L. J. 123. The essence of the section is the agreement habitually to commit dacoity not the actual commission of dacoities. Existence of such an agreement and the participation of any person in that agreement may be inferred from the circumstances. 1928. Cal. 309 ; A. I. R. 1921 All. 32=19 A. L. J. 725=22 Cr. L. J. 663=63 Ind. Cas. 455.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

401. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong to any wandering or other gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, and not being a gang of thugs, or dacoits, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—To sustain a conviction on a charge under this section, there must be proof that association was for the purpose of habitual theft. The habit should be proved by an aggregate of acts. 9 P. R. 1880 Cr. It is not sufficient to prove that the accused is simply a member of a robber tribe ; it should also be shown that he actually consorted with persons who were themselves associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. 37 P. R. 1869 Cr. There must be evidence that the accused were members of a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft, before there should be a conviction of an offence under this section. 4 C. W. N. 97. Previous convictions under s. 110 Cr. Pro. Code are relevant. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 211=126 Ind. Cas. 468. Previous convictions and proceedings under s. 110 Cr. Pro. Code are admissible for proving habit though not of general bad character. Such evidence is not excluded by s. 54 Evidence Act. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 211=126 Ind. Cas. 468 ; but see 31 C. L. J. 192=21 Cr. L. J. 386=47 C. 154. But reports of existence of gang of cattle lifter and frequency of thefts in particular area, made to police are inadmissible being hearsay. Ibid. Evidence of frequent commission of or complicity in thefts or robberies is enough for conviction. 31 C. L. J. 192=47 C. 154=55 Ind. Css. 994. Mere fact that accused was found to have received stolen property from gang is not sufficient to convict them under s. 401. Being member of gang associated for purpose of committing burglaries is different from actually taking part in them. Generally concurrent sentences should be given though consecutive sentences are illegal. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 298=136 Ind. Cas. 27=33 Cr. L. J. 251=33 P. L. R. 602. It is not necessary for a conviction under this section that the person convicted must have taken part in any one theft or robbery. 118 Ind. Cas. 423=30 Cr. L. J. 922=A. I. R. 1929 Oudh. 321. In determining to what extent in any particular case the punishment should approach to or recede from the maximum limit prescribed by the section, the trying Magistrate has to take into account several factors, inter alia the antecedents of the prisoner, whether such antecedents speak well or ill of him, such as his character and state of life whether good or bad including previous convictions if any. 24 S. L. R. 252=A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 211. This section ought not to be resorted to when the persons sought to be brought within its four corners might have been made responsible, for distinct and individual offences ; nor is it intended to affect them unless an association for the actual commission or theft of robbery is clearly made out. A. W. N. 1816, 16 ; see also A. W. N. 1886, 15 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 418 ; 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 24 ; 33 P. R. 1886 ; 3 P. R. 1915 ; 15 C. W. N. 462 ; 14 Bom. L. R. 373 ; 10 Ind. Cas. 23 ; 36 P. W. R. 1912 Cr. ; 1 Cr. L. J. 690 ; 1 Weir 452. To sustain a conviction under this section it is necessary to prove (1) that there existed a gang of persons ; (2) that those persons were associated for the purpose of committing theft or robbery ; (3) that theft or robbery was committed habitually ; (4) that the accused was a member of such a gang. 13 P. R. 1914 Cr. ; 110 P. L. R. 1916 ; 47 C. 154 ; 1923 Lah. 666 ; 73 Ind. Cas. 815 ; 26 Bom. L. R. 1223. As regards value of approver's evidence to prove an offence under this section, vide, 87 Ind. Cas. 846=26 Cr. L. J. 1024. The object of this section is to punish the persons who organise thieving expeditions and form a party to commit theft. 28 Cr. L. J.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

402. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall be one of five or more persons assembled for the purpose of assembling for purpose of committing dacoity, shall be punished with committing dacoity. rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—A mere assembly without further preparation is not a preparation under s. 349. This section applies to the case of mere assembly without proof of other preparation. 18 C. W. N. 498. See also 23 A. 124. The members of an unlawful assembly were held to be guilty of an offence under this section, on their own admission that they not only knew that the assembly was an assembly for committing dacoity, but also that all the members (including themselves) composing it lived on the proceeds of dacoity, and had no other means of living. 7 W. R. Cr. 61. But an assemblage of 5 or more persons for the purpose of concerting plans for committing a dacoity yet remote or contingent or for discussing the possibility of committing it is not within the meaning of this section, which postulates a determination to commit a dacoity. 22 Ind. Cas. 833; 32 Ind. Cas. 343. Proof of being member of the gang is enough. Proof of the actual part taken by each is not necessary. 34 Ind. Cas. 1000; see also 84 Ind. Cas. 860=A. I. R. 1925 All. 62=22 A. L. J. 1028=26 Cr. L. J. 380; 106 Ind. Cas. 350=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 144=29 Cr. L. J. 14. So accused belonging to different villages found together in a lonely place armed for committing dacoity can be convicted under this section. 27 Cr. L. J. 605=94 Ind. Cas. 269.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Of Criminal Misappropriation of Property.

403. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any movable property, shall be punished with Dishonest misappropriation of property. imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Illustrations

(a) A takes property belonging to Z out of Z's possession, in good faith, believing, at the time when he takes it, that the property belongs to himself. A is not guilty of theft; but if, A after discovering his mistake dishonestly appropriates the property to his own use, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

(b) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent. Here if A was under the impression that he had Z's implied consent to take the book for the purpose of reading it, A has not committed theft. But, if A afterwards sells the book for his own benefit he is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c) A and B being joint-owners of a horse, A takes the horse out of B's possession, intending to use it. Here, as A has a right to use the horse, he does not dishonestly misappropriate it. But, if A sells the horse and appropriates the whole proceeds to his own use, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

Explanation 1.—A dishonest misappropriation for a time only is a misappropriation within the meaning of this section.

Illustration.

A finds Government promissory note belonging to Z, bearing a blank endorsement. A knowing that the note belongs to Z, pledges it with a banker as a security for a loan, intending at a future time to restore it to Z. A has committed an offence under this section.

Explanation II.—A person who finds property not in the possession of any other person, and takes such property for the purpose of protecting it for, or of restoring it to, the owner, does not take or misappropriate it dishonestly, and is not guilty of an offence ; but he is guilty of the offence above defined, if he appropriates it to his own use, when he knows or has the means of discovering the owner, or before has used reasonable means to discover and give notice to the owner, and has kept the property a reasonable time to enable the owner to claim it.

What are reasonable means, or what is a reasonable time in such a case, is a question of fact.

It is not necessary that the finder should know who is the owner of the property, or that any particular person is the owner of it ; it is sufficient if, at the time of appropriating it, he does not believe it to be his own property, or in good faith believes that the real owner cannot be found.

Illustration.

(a) A finds a rupee on the high road, not knowing to whom the rupee belongs. A picks up the rupee. Here A has not committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A finds a letter on the road, containing a bank-note. From the direction and contents of the letter he learns to whom the note belongs. He appropriates the note. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c) A finds a cheque payable to bearer. He can form no conjecture as to the person who has lost the cheque. But the name of the person who has drawn the cheque appears. A knows that this person can direct him to the person in whose favour the cheque was drawn. A appropriates the cheque without attempting to discover the owner. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(d) A sees Z drop his purse with money in it. A picks up the purse with the intention of restoring it to Z, but afterwards appropriates it to his own use. A has committed an offence under this section.

(e) A finds a purse with money, not knowing to whom it belongs ; he afterwards discovers that it belongs to Z, and appropriates it to his own use. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(f) A finds a valuable ring, not knowing to whom it belongs. A sells it immediately without attempting to discover the owner. A is guilty of offence under this section.

Gist of offence.—To constitute the offence under this section, there must be misappropriation of movable property and the misappropriation must be dishonest. In order to be dishonest, the property must be misappropriated or converted "with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or a wrongful loss to another" i. e. with the intention of causing gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining it is not legally entitled, or the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled. Where there is no intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss of property and merely an intention to deprive the owner temporarily of the use of the property, dishonestly is not made out. 27 P. R. 1887, Cr. Criminal misappropriation takes place when the possession has been innocently come by, but where by a subsequent change of intention, or from the knowledge of some new fact with which the party was not previously acquainted, the retaining becomes wrongful and fraudulent. 15 C. 388. Where money is paid by mistake, and the person receiving it either at the time he received the money or at any time subsequently before its refund, discovers the mistake made by the complainant, but determines to appropriate the money, he is guilty of misappropriation. 2 N. W. P. 475. Where a Railway Claim Inspector whose duty was to investigate claims and to report what arrangements he could make with persons making claims against the railway sold certain goods to a claimant but never credited the price to the Railway ; held, that he was guilty of the offence of criminal misappropriation under s. 403 and not an offence under s. 408. 28 Cr. L. J. 161=99 Ind. Cas. 593=8 Lah. L. J. 515. Proof as to some of the money mentioned in the charge being misappropriated is sufficient even though exact amount is uncertain. 1928 Bom. 148. Mere retention of money is not an offence. 1928 Bom. 205=30 Bom. L. R. 624=29 Cr. L. J. 922. In a case of alleged misappropriation, it is not enough for the prosecution to show that the accused received certain sums of money and failed to account for them, unless and until the prosecution can point to state of facts which led inevitably to the conclusion that the accused was guilty, the prosecution has failed to discharge the onus which lies on him. 61 C. 168 ; see also A. I. R. 1933 P. C. 7=64 M. L. J. 290=1933 Cr. C. 130=143 Ind. Cas. 224=34 Cr. L. J. 550. (P. C.)

Theft and misappropriation distinguished.—In theft the object of the offender always is to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession; and the offence is complete as soon as the offender moved the property in order to a dishonest taking of it. In the offence of criminal misappropriation, there is not necessarily an invasion of the possession of another person by an attempt to take from him that which he possesses. The offender is already in possession of the property and is either lawfully in possession of it, because he has found it or is a joint owner of it, or his possession, if not strictly lawful, is not punishable as an offence because he has acquired it under some mistaken notion of right in himself or of consent given by another (See the illustrations to section 403). The offence consists not in wrongfully obtaining possession, but in the misappropriation, either permanently or for a time, of property which is already without wrong in the possession of the offender. The dishonest intention to appropriate the property of another is common to theft and to criminal misappropriation. But this intention which in theft is sufficiently manifested by a moving of the property must in the other offence be carried into action by an actual misappropriation or conversion.—Morgan and Macpherson. 359. In both the cases the property is movable property. Where property, lost by the owner, is found in the possession of the accused, the offence committed by the accused is not theft but criminal misappropriation as the property was not taken from the possession of the owner. 1 L. B. R. 123. An easy method of differentiating between the offence of theft, cheating with delivery of property, criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust is to find out whether the original taking was honest or dishonest and whether it was with the consent of the owner or without it. In theft the original taking is without honesty and without the consent of the owner, and in criminal breach of trust it is with both. In obtaining property by cheating the taking is dishonest but with the consent of the owner, and in criminal misappropriation it is honest but without the consent of the owner. A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 113.

Dishonestly.—Where there is no dishonest intention an offence is not made out. Cr. Rg. 1st May, 1872. In a case of criminal misappropriation, the Court should consider the question, whether the money was kept with a dishonest intention, or only on a wrong opinion that the prisoner was justified in keeping it. In the latter case, the act of the accused would not constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 700. A partner who dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any of the partnership property with which he is entrusted or which he has dominion over, is guilty of an offence under this section. 6 Bom. L. R. 553; 1 P. L. T. 197; 10 P. R. 1903 Cr.; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 154=25 Cr. L. J. 669=81 Ind. Cas. 157. So also the retaining of money by servants for his wages would constitute an offence. 11 W. R. Cr. 51. No offence under this section is made out until it is established that there is dishonest misappropriation. A. W. N. 1881. 80. See also, 10 W. Cr. 23; 17 W. R. Cr. 11. Joint property may be the subject of criminal misappropriation. A. W. N. 1881. 89; 1 J. G. 31. In a case of criminal misappropriation, the element of dishonesty on the part of the accused has to be proved beyond doubt. 1923 Cal. 57; see also A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 454=1934 Cr. C. 620=35 Cr. L. A person finding a property of which from the nature of it there must be owner, must take reasonable care of it and endeavour to find out the owner. 67 Ind. Cas. 497. Where the accused acted bona fide in retaining property belonging to the complainant no offence under this section is committed. 44 M. L. J. 128. Where the reversioner of a mortgagor sold some of the bricks of the mortgaged property, that had tumbled down and appropriated the price, held that accused could not be convicted either under this section or under s. 426, in the absence of a finding of dishonest misappropriation or of substantial deterioration of the property. 6 C. W. N. 34. The managing member of a joint Hindu family may be liable to a charge of misappropriation, if after a division of the property has taken place, and the share of each member of the family has been ascertained, it is found that the manager has wrongfully applied to his own use the share that belongs to one of the other co-parceners. 1 Weir. 453. The accused found two logs of wood drifting in a river and took possession of them. They were left in front of his house for nine months. Held that he committed no offence under this section. 1 Weir 455. The mere picking up of money, and retaining it, or making it over to another, could not necessarily constitute the offence. 5 C. P. L. R. 47 Cr. See also 28 P. L. B. 1905; 11 P. R. 1908 Cr.

Misappropriates and converts.—The essential ingredient for an offence under this section is proof of dishonest misappropriation of the property or conversion to one's own use. 47 Ind. Cas. 667; 40 A. 190 Misappropriation means setting apart the thing appropriated to the wrong person or for wrong use and that dishonestly. 16 Cr. L. J. 1915=31 Ind. Cas. 651. An offence under this section is committed where money is converted to his own use. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 4. It is not criminal misappropriation for one of several co-owners to take property belonging to them all unless it is also found that he appropriated it to his sole use. 25 Cr. L. J. 669 (1). Any use of temple property by the priest otherwise than for the idol or temple amounts to misappropriation. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 919. In a case of criminal misappropriation, the Court should consider the question, whether the money was kept with a dishonest intention, or only on a wrong opinion that the prisoner was justified in keeping it. In the latter case, the act of the accused would not constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 700; 6 Bom. L. R. 94. Where agent or servant applies the money collected on behalf of his master to his own use he commits an offence under this section. 3 N. W. P. 30. A person who is proved to have dishonestly misappropriated cannot be convicted of retaining it under s. 411. 3 L. B. R. 254. An offence under this section has been committed when a person tries to dispose of another's missing bullock. 119 Ind. Cas. 863=30 Cr. L. J. 1133=A. I. R. 1929 A. 917=1929 Cr. C. 645. Where a licensee makes an entry in receipts contrary to rules fixed, he does not commit an offence under this section. 1930 Cr. C. 468=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 408. The appropriation by the finder of a spanner of no appreciable value the owner of which the finder had no reasonable means of discovering, falls under illustration (a) of s. 403. 32 Bom. L. R. 356=A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 176. Where the accused is charged for an offence under s. 403 I. P. Code it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to establish that a definite sum has been misappropriated. 52 B. 280=30 Bom. L. R. 325=108 Ind. Cas. 505. Appropriation of money paid by mistake is an offence under this section. 2 N. W. P. 425. A and B met at Benares station. A got a ticket for Ajudhia and B for Benares Cantonment. A showed her ticket to B to see if it was all right. A instead of returning the same ticket, substituted his own. Held that the offence was one of misappropriation under this section. A. W. N. 1995, 9. A person who found coin from land bought by him cannot be convicted under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 8. This section, is in no way restricted to appropriating property to one's own use. If a trustee repudiates the trust and asserts that he is holding on behalf of a person other than the one who entrusted it to him; he is as much guilty of misappropriation as if he had put up his own claim. 92 Ind. Cas. 585=48 A. 288=27 Cr. L. J. 297.

Movable property.—A bull set at large by a Hindu at the time of performing funeral ceremonies in accordance with Hindu religious usage is not property "capable of being misappropriated" 8 A. 51. A bull dedicated to an idol and allowed to roam at large is not free bastia and therefore re nullius. 11 M. 145; see also 23 Cr. L. J. 401=67 Ind. Cas. 497. The offence consists in the dishonest misappropriation or conversion of movable property, and before a conviction can be recorded, it must be proved that the article forming the object of the charge was movable property. 18 B. 212. Standing crops are immovable property. When a judgment-debtor cuts the crops under attachment and removes them he commits an offence under this section. 22 M. 151. Where a bullock followed a cow and owner lost possession of same, bullock cannot be subject of theft but of misappropriation. 18 Cr. L. J. 300=38 Ind. Cas. 332=10 Bur. L. T. 261.

Explanation 1.—The offence under this section consists in the dishonest misappropriation or conversion either permanently or for a time, of property which is already without wrong in the possession of the offender. 12 M. 49. Where the brother of a girl, who picked up a gold necklace, got possession of the necklace from the latter on the representation that it belonged to an acquaintance of his, but later on delivered it to the police, although repeating to the police, representations made to his sister, which were found to be untrue to the knowledge of the accused, held, that he was guilty under section. 24 R. 1886 Cr.

Charge.—In a case in which the accused in charged under this section, the charge should specify the person to whom the property belonged. 14 W. R. Cr. 13. Several causes of misappropriation constitute separate offences. 15 W. R. Cr. 5. Sessions Judge can convert conviction from s. 405 to s. 403, A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 14.

Proof.—The fact of misappropriation can be proved by direct as well as by circumstantial evidence. 34 C. L. J. 200. Where a police constable of seventeen years' standing caught a stray sheep intended for sacrifice and on his transfer from the thana to which he was attached to another thana took it with him there, held that it was sufficient evidence of dishonesty and that he was guilty of an offence under this section. 17 A. L. J. 145.

Completion of the offence.—Under this section the offence is complete the moment the accused receives or retains the money with a dishonest motive of appropriating it or converting it into his own use. 1921 Pat. 31=56 Ind. Cas. 775.

Cases.—It is a possible view that an accused is guilty of criminal breach of trust between the misappropriation and the repayment, but Courts should be slow when repayment is at once made on demand to assume guilt in accused person. Criminal liability is not the same as civil liability. 97 Ind. Cas. 1041=27 Cr. L. J. 1217. It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule applicable to all cases that if a man cannot move a thing away, he cannot dishonestly convert it to his own use. 92 Ind. Cas. 747=27 Cr. L. J. 331=50 M. L. J. 94. Where a Sub-Inspector of Police who came across a stray bullock advertised for the owner but as no one turned up had it sold after 20 days, he is not guilty of any offence under this section. 91 Ind. Cas. 37=23 A. L. J. 128. Where it is proved that a certain sum of money for which a Hindu father was accountable was not accounted for him and in a scheme sent he was ordered to pay the amount it will not amount to misappropriation. 1926 M. W. N. 194=23 L. W. 714=94 Ind. Cas. 634=50 M. L. J. 353. Where a Post master opens a V. P. article addressed to himself and extracts a railway receipt from it without paying for it for six days and makes a false entry in P. O. books, he is guilty of criminal misappropriation. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 92=29 P. L. R. 151=29 Cr. L. J. 236. Where a Post-master opened a V. P. article addressed to himself and extracted a railway receipt from it without paying for it for six days and made false entries in the P. O. books it amounts to technical misappropriation under s. 403. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 92=8 Lah. 662=29 P. L. R. 151=19 Cr. L. J. 598=109 Ind. Cas. 236; see also 68 Ind. Cas. 157=A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 146=23 Cr. L. J. 557. In case of receiving money to be handed over at another place with dishonest motive offence is committed at the place of receipt. Failure to hand over is not an ingredient of the offence nor is it a consequence. A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 85=1921 P. H. C. C. 31.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of the Court—Triable by any Magistrate.

404. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use property, knowing that such property was in the possession of a deceased person at the time of that person's decease, and has not since been in the possession of any person legally entitled to such possession, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offender, at the time of such person's decease, was employed by him as clerk or servant, the imprisonment may extend to seven years.

Illustration.

Z dies in possession of furniture and money. His servant A, before the money comes into the possession of any person entitled to such possession, dishonestly misappropriates it. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—This section is intended only to punish servants and strangers who could possibly have no right to or interest in, the effects of a dead man, and who misappropriated such effects, but not to punish near relations who take possession of and deal with the effects under a claim of independent ownership or as heir to the deceased. 25 Ind. Cas. 514. It is not necessary for a conviction under this section that the accused should misappropriate it to his own use. 12 W. R. Cr. 39; 11 W. R. Cr. 1. Under this section all the elements are required to constitute the offence which would be required to constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation in respect of a person who is alive. 12 W. R. Cr. 39. This section does not apply to immovable property. 6 B. H. C. Cr. 33. This section relates to a description of property peculiarly needing protection. The offence consists in pillaging of movable property during the interval which elapses between the time when the possessor of the property dies, and the time when it comes into the possession of some person or officer authorized to take charge of it. The proof should be that the property belonged to or was in the possession of the deceased person at the time of his death, and that it has since been misappropriated or converted to his own use by a person who knew or had reason to know that it belonged to the deceased.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section is expressly limited to movable property alone and criminal misappropriation or conversion is easily possible of the movable property where the materials which have been secured from the building are removed. Of Criminal Breach of Trust.

Distinguishing feature of the offences.—This offence like the offence of criminal misappropriation is characterised by an actual fraudulent appropriation of property. There is not originally a wrongful taking or moving as in theft, but the offence consists in wrongful appropriation of property, consequent upon a possession which is lawful. The offence is distinguishable from criminal misappropriation because the subject of it is not property, which by some casualty or otherwise, but without criminal means, comes into the offender's possession; but the property, which is entrusted to the offender by the owner or by other's lawful authority and which the offender holds subject to some duty or obligation to apply it according to the trust—Morgan and Macpherson.

405. Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property, dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property, or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust, or willfully suffers any other person so to do, commits "criminal breach of trust."

Illustrations.

(a) A, being executor to the will of a deceased person dishonestly disobeys the law which directs him to divide the effects according to the will, and appropriates them to his own use. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(b) A is a warehouse keeper. Z, going on a journey, entrusts his furniture to A, under a contract that it shall be returned on payment of a stipulated sum for warehouse-room. A dishonestly sells the goods. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(c) A residing in Calcutta, is agent for Z, residing at Delhi. There is an express or implied contract between A and Z, that all sums remitted by Z to A shall be invested by A according to Z's direction. Z remits a lakh of rupees to A, with direction to A to invest the same in Company's paper. A dishonestly disobeys the directions, and employs the money in his own business. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(d) But if A, in the last illustration, not dishonestly, but in good faith, believing that it will be more for Z's advantage to hold shares in the Bank of Bengal, disobeys Z's directions, and buys shares in the Bank of Bengal, for Z instead of buying Company's paper, here, though Z should suffer loss, and should be entitled to bring a civil action against A, on account of that loss, yet A, not having acted dishonestly, has not committed criminal breach of trust.

(e) A, a revenue-officer, is entrusted with public money, and is either directed by law or bound by a contract, express or implied, with the Government, to pay into a certain treasury all the public money which he holds. A dishonestly appropriates the money. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(f) A, a carrier, is entrusted by Z with property to be carried by land or by water. A dishonestly misappropriates the property. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

Scope.—The offence, as here defined, appears to include any dishonest misappropriation by persons in whom confidence is placed as to the custody or application of particular property whether it be by legal authority or private contract or consent. Persons as clerks, agents, servants or otherwise, under whatsoever name, have a confidence reposed in them by their employers and are, whether in the ordinary course of their employment or only occasionally entrusted with property and persons whose employment does not extend beyond the particular occasion on which they are so entrusted, seem to be within this section. Those who are technically, called trustees, if they commit a breach of trust are responsible as criminals for acts done by them dishonestly for their own gain to the despoiling of the persons for whom they are in trust, or for acts causing wrongful gain to themselves or wrongful loss to such persons. Sections 407-409 make special provisions for various cases in which property is entrusted to agents or contractors who commits this offence.

This definition includes those who are entrusted in any manner with property, as ware house-keepers, etc., are entrusted only with the possession or custody of property. Persons who are empowered to take or deliver possession of property whether such power is derived from the owner or from any other person, and persons who are entrusted with any dominion over property are also included. Property which is bulky or which cannot, for other reasons be delivered from hand to hand, is usually represented by some writing or other thing. Thus the key of the warehouse or place where goods are lodged, the bill of lading, delivery order, or other document however called, which is used in the ordinary course or business to show the possession or control of property and which enables the holder to transfer or receive or otherwise deal with it, are made to represent the property itself. A person entrusted with such a document or thing has a dominion over the property thereby represented.—Morgan and Macpherson, 365. Evidences of trust and dishonest misappropriation are sufficient to constitute an offence under this section. 1 Weir 460; 16 W. R. Cr. 39; 9 A. 666; 3 W. R. Cr. 44; 1914 M. W. N. 894=16 M. L. Dishonestly.—The word "dishonestly" means the doing of an act with the intention of causing wrongful loss or wrongful gain, and wrongful gain is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled. For either in wrongful loss or gain, the property must be lost to the owner or the owner must be wrongfully kept out of it. 1 Weir. 416=3 M. H. C. App. 6. Dishonest misappropriation might sometimes be inferred from the circumstances without direct evidence : 2 Cr. L. J. 478. A matter which is ex-facie a civil dispute should not be entertained by the criminal court unless the prosecution is able to prove clearly and beyond doubt that the accused acted dishonestly and with a view to enrich himself clandestinely at the expense of those with whom he was working and with whom he was bound by a fiduciary relationship. 55 Ind. Cas. 469. It is not a criminal offence in every case for a pleader to retain fee the legal recovery of which is time-barred. 6 N. L. J. 119.

Disposal of property in violation of any direction of law etc.—A person, who pledges what is pledged to him, may be guilty of criminal breach of trust. There are two elements to constitute the offence, (1) the disposal in violation of any direction of law or contract, express or implied describing the mode in which the trust ought to be discharged, (2) and such disposal must be made dishonestly. Great caution ought to be used in drawing the inference of dishonesty from a breach of duty imposed by civil law. 1 Weir 461=6 M. H. C. R. App. 28; 1 Weir 464; U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 345; 17 Bom. L. R. 670.

Agreement.—An agreement allowing a person who had committed criminal breach of trust, to refund the property misappropriated cannot operate to bar a subsequent prosecution for the offence of criminal breach of trust. 1 Weir. 462.

Partnership.—In a partnership, it is open to a partner to spend the money he receives and account for it in dealing with the partnership, and such a partner is plainly entitled to be called upon for an account of the expenditure of the money which he has received. In a case where it was not satisfactorily made out that this was not done, and it would not be made out in the absence of a proper demand for an account, it was held that no dishonest conversion could be found, which would justify the conviction of a partner under this section. 35 C. 1108; see also 145 Ind. Cas. 416=37 C. W. N. 982=1933 Cr. C. 953=34 Cr. L. J. 958=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 582; but see A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 57=1932 Cr. C. 81=33 Bom. L. R. 1518=136 Ind. Cas. 493.

Burden of proof.—Where in a charge of criminal breach of trust, the accused pleads payment to the proper person, the burden of proving non-payment is on the prosecution and not on the accused. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 872; see also 28 S. L. R. 84=A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 22=1934 Cr. C. 220. The prosecution must prove that trust has been created in respect of the property. 85 Ind. Cas. 839; 25 C. W. N. 838=65 Ind. Cas. 1004.

Evidence.—The evidence in support of a charge of criminal breach of trust must show, (1) that the accused person was, in some manner entrusted with the property or with a domain over it. The offence consists in the betrayal of some trust or confidence reposed in the offender. Dealings concerning property between independent persons in the course of which debts or claims by one against the other arise are not subject of this offence. There can be no criminal misappropriation unless some trust or confidence exists.

(2) It must be proved that the accused has dishonestly misappropriated or disposed of the property in violation of his duty. As to the proof of the criminal misappropriation in cases where money has been misappropriated, it will often be of the following kind either the offender has wilfully made false entries in his books or else he has denied or wilfully omitted to acknowledge the receipt of the money. A person who keeps the accounts, or otherwise duly acknowledges the receipt of money, cannot ordinarily be supposed to intend to commit a criminal breach of trust. On the other hand the mere fact of his making an entry in the books of account will not protect him. The fact of not paying over money or not accounting for it, will not probably of itself be thought sufficient to justify a conviction, even though the accused person sets up a frivolous excuse or advances a claim wholly unfounded. But the absconding of the accused, coupled with a refusal to account or a false account, furnishes strong evidence of a criminal misappropriation of the money. If the evidence in support of the charge leaves it doubtful whether the offence which has been committed is theft or criminal breach of trust, the Court may nevertheless proceed to judgment and award punishment (see section 72)—Morgan and Macpherson.

Where money was paid to a person for a particular purpose and in the case of the purpose failing, it was appropriated towards a debt due to him, there is no offence of criminal breach of trust. 92 Ind. Cas. 895=27 Cr. L. J. 383. Where money is advanced in respect of a contract, and there is no entrustment in fiduciary form, any dispute arising out of the breach of contract is one of civil nature and capable of settlement not in the criminal but in the civil courts. 96 Ind. Cas. 501=27 Cr. L. J. 949.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Cases.—To make out a case of criminal breach of trust, it is not sufficient to show that the money has been returned. It must also be shown that the accused disposed of it in some way other than that in which he was bound to apply it, and that he did so dishonestly. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 345. The mere retention of money did not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation to one's own use, but such dishonest misappropriation might sometimes be inferred from circumstances without direct evidence. The essential thing to be proved in case of criminal breach of trust is whether the accused was actuated by dishonest intention or not. In a case of criminal breach of trust if the prosecution could not prove how the accused came by the money, they did not establish one of the first essentials of the offence charged that he was entrusted with the money. 25 C. W. N. 838. The gist of the offence under this section is the dishonest misappropriation or the conversion by one to his own use of the property of another which has been entrusted to him. 52 Ind. Cas. 480=20 Cr. L. J. 654. A chairman of a Co-operative Society is not a public servant as such criminal breach of trust by him is not punishable under section 409 I. P. Code, but under section 406. 36 Bom. L. R. 1133.

Where the accused were entrusted by a Court officer with certain movable property attached in execution of a decree, but at the time of sale they did not produce the property and evaded the service of notice, held that they could not be guilty of criminal breach of trust inasmuch as they did not misappropriate the property or convert it to their own use or dispose of it in any manner contrary to the terms of the trust. 16 A. tion for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—Those who receive property under a contract express or implied to carry it or keep it in safe custody are by this section made punishable for a criminal breach of duty with respect to such property. Carriers by water who run their boats or vessels ashore, intending to misappropriate the cargo, are punishable under s. 439 Morgan and Macpherson, 368. Where property is entrusted to a person as a carrier, it is necessary to show at least, in order to convict him of criminal breach of trust, that some of the property could not be accounted for by him. 9 Bom. L. R. 229.

Procedure—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

408. Whoever, being a clerk or servant, or employed as a clerk or servant, and being in any manner entrusted in such capacity with property, or with any dominion over property, commits criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—A clerk or servant who takes his master's property is punishable for theft. (See section 381). The present provision seems to apply to cases in which there is some special trust, as where the clerk or servant is entrusted with his master's property that he may sell or dispose of it, or where he is appointed to collect money and to pay it over to his employer. The criminal misappropriation by such person of the particular property entrusted to him, is an offence here made punishable in the same manner as the taking of master's property by a servant when the property taken is not in his possession or charge in the time of his service or employment, as the theft by a menial servant of money or other property from his master's house.—Morgan and Macpherson, 369. Under this section the intention of the accused to misappropriate is sufficient to convict him. 26 Cr. L. J. 1149. Presumption of criminal misappropriation can be raised against servant failing to properly account for property entrusted to him. 26 Cr. L. J. 267=84 Ind. Cas. 331. Cases.—In order to sustain a conviction for the abetment of criminal breach of trust by a servant, it must be proved that the accused knew that, in respect of such transaction, the servant was acting dishonestly and was committing a breach of trust, and that the accused abetted the servant in doing it. 4 C. W. N. 309. Where a person, entrusted with some blocks of wood engraving for the purpose of having a catalogue printed for the complainant, allowed his brother to use the block to print his catalogue, held that such act constituted criminal breach of trust. 6 C. Where a servant committed criminal breach of trust, held, that the circumstance the employer had taken a bond for the amounts misappropriated, would not prevent the prosecution or conviction of the accused for the offence. 1 Weir 465. On a Court Inspector having no authority to delegate to a constable the custody, etc., of Government money, delegating to him the said functions, taking no doubt private security for his safeguarding, and on the constable dishonestly converting the money to his own use, held that the case fell under s. 408, Penal Code, notwithstanding subsequent restoration by the constable. 8 W. A servant received from his employers a firm in Calcutta, some bags of waste paper with an order to take them to their yard and there to burn and destroy the papers. The servant instead of destroying them brought some of them to Bowbazar in Calcutta, held that the act committed by the accused did not amount to an offence under s. 408. 29 C. 489. Where a clerk of a Co-operative Bank received moneys from some of the members of the bank with instructions to pay the said sums to another affiliated bank, but, instead of so paying the amount to the said bank, became a member of the society and took a loan from the society which would cover these amounts, held that he could not be convicted of an offence under s. 408 I. P. Code, simply because he disobeyed the instructions of the members, as there was no evidence of an intention to misappropriate the amount to his own use. 117 Ind. Cas. 632=30 Cr. L. J. 812=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 506. Mere retention of money or mere failure to return it does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation. The mere fact that the payment was delayed is no ground for imputing a criminal intention. Though the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust are somewhat broadly stated there can be no doubt that the section was intended to punish an offence of which dishonesty is the essence. Where in a trial for one offence under s. 908 I. P. Code with regard to a gross sum said to have been misappropriated within a year and composed of items more than three in number, the Judge instead of inviting verdict in respect of charge under s. 408, asked the jury to give their verdict in respect of the charges as laid against the accused on the several items and the jury returned a verdict of guilty as regards some of its items only and not guilty as regards others and the Judge convicted the accused under s. 408. Held that though the form in which verdict was asked for and expressed was wrong, proper form being simply to ask jury their verdict in respect of an offence under s. 408, the defect was one of form and did not prejudicially affect the accused. 34 C. W. 901=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 717=1930 Cr. C. 1117. The accused who was a clerk was entrusted as such by his master with a certain sum of money which it was his duty to apply in a particular manner. erty or with documents which give him dominion over property, and not otherwise. It seems that the property must be entrusted to him in such manner that he becomes subject, by contract, express or implied, or by force of law, to a certain duty in regard to it. A factor or agent who sells the goods of his employer and receives the money on his behalf, if he commits a criminal breach of trust by dishonestly misappropriating his principal's money will be punishable under this section. But the relation between a banker and his customer is not necessarily of the same fiduciary kind. The money which the customer places in his banker's custody becomes the banker's money; he may employ it as he pleases and he commits no breach of trust even if he puts it in jeopardy; only he is of course answerable for the repayment of the amount which he has received. It seems that a banker would be criminally liable under the present section only in case he under-took some particular duty (in the way of his business) in relation to the property entrusted to him; as if he received Government Paper or other securities into his custody, undertaking to keep them safely, and to receive interest, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson, 369; 16 A. 88. For a conviction under this section all the elements laid down as constituting the offence must be strictly proved and if the charge is that a worthless property has been substituted for a valuable one, it must be positively shown that there was some valuable property in the package when it came under the control of the accused. 41 C. Of the Receiving of Stolen Property.

410. Property, the possession whereof has been transferred by theft, Stolen property. or by extortion, or by robbery, and property which has been criminally misappropriated, or in respect of which criminal breach of trust has been committed, is designated as stolen property, "whether the transfer has been made, or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed, within or without British India." But, if such property subsequently comes into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof, it then ceases to be the stolen property.

Legislative changes.—Here the words "the offence of" have been omitted by Act XII of 1891 and Act VIII of 1882. The words quoted have been inserted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1882) s. 9.

Principle.—The receiver of stolen property though not strictly a participator in the offence by which the property has been acquired, facilitates the commission of that offence or at least renders its detection more difficult, by aiding the thief in the disposal of the property. But the Code does not treat the receiver as an accessory or abettor, or as an offender against public justice. It makes the offence of receiving stolen property a substantive offence, and punishes the receiver, not always as it punishes the principal offender but with a punishment more or less severe according to circumstances.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Stolen property.—An extended signification is given to the words "stolen property," which are used in the four subsequent sections. Not only things which have been stolen, extorted or robbed but also things which have been obtained by criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust are within the meaning here assigned to these words. Morgan and Macpherson, 371. 15 Cr. L. J. 675. Property is not stolen property, unless the act by which it has been acquired has been committed either in British India or elsewhere by a person who is liable to be tried in British India for offence committed elsewhere. 5 B. 338. (F. B.)

But if such property, etc.—The rules of the civil law applicable to the transfer, and acquisition of moveable property, must be consulted to ascertain when "stolen property" ceases to be so by reason of its coming "into the possession of a person legally entitled to the possession thereof." Suppose goods are found by the owner in the pockets of a thief or on his person and the owner takes the goods again into his possession, but afterwards, for the purpose of detecting the receiver, gives them back to the thief desiring him to sell them as he had sold other stolen property. These goods having ceased to be "stolen property," the person who receives or buys them from the thief, however guilty is not a receiver of such property.—Morgan and Macpherson, 371. See also 11 P. L. R. 1905; 113 P. L. R. 1914.

Identification.—A conviction under this section is not maintainable, unless the stolen property is undoubtedly identified. 194 P. L. R. 1912; 3 M. L. T. 30. The identity of property alleged to be stolen, but recovered and produced and not distinguishable from the property stolen, may be generally established from the surrounding circumstances found to have existed rather than by the evidence of persons able to speak with personal knowledge on the matter. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 199.

Theft.—If stolen property is found soon after the possession of a person who cannot give a reasonable account of the way by which he became possessed of it, it is fair to presume that he himself is the thief. If the evidence leaves it doubtful whether the accused is guilty of theft or of receiving stolen property, he may be adjudged guilty and punished under s. 72. Morgan and Macpherson, 473; 1 L. B. R. 39. The presumption arising from the possession of stolen property is one which is strengthened, weakened or rebutted by concomitant circumstances, such as the length of time elapsing, vicinity to the spot, nature of the property and the behaviour of the accused. Morgan and Macpherson, 373; 23 W. R. Cr. 16. A missing bullock cannot be stolen within the meaning of this section. 30 Cr. L. J. 1133=119 Ind. Cas. 863=A. I. R. 1929 All. 917.

411. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine or with both.

Receives.—There must be a taking into his possession of the "stolen property" by the receiver; but a manual possession or a touching of the property is not essential to constitute a receipt of it. If the stolen property has come under the control of the receiver, as, if it is in the hands of a person whom he can command in respect to it, he has received it.—Morgan and Macpherson, 371. In the case of dishonest receiving, the offence is complete when the stolen property is received the receiver knowing or having reason to believe at the time that the property was stolen property. 9 C. W. N. 1027. The production of railway receipt of goods establishes possession of the accused. 14 Cr. L. J. 318=19 Ind. Cas. 1006=40 C. 990. Retains.—If a "stolen property" has been brought without permission to the house of a person who retains it after he becomes aware that it has been stolen, he will be punishable under this section. Morgan and Macpherson, 371; 1912 M. W. N. 362; 31 P. R. 1879 Cr.; 21 A. L. J. 836; 44 M. L. J. 243. Where considerable time elapses between the theft and the discovery of the stolen article possession by itself does not require any explanation. 1912 M. W. N. 529; see also 57 C. L. J. 57=1933 Cr. C. 958=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 594; A. I. R. 1933 All. 893; A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 85=32 Cr. L. J. 614=12 P. L. T. 1350.

Stolen property.—Where there is no evidence to show that a certain property has been actually stolen, a conviction under s. 411 with reference to such property, is not valid. 2 N. W. P. 187 ; 8 P. R. 1867 Cr. 13 P. R. 1867 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 416 ; 35 Ind. Cas. 488, 19 N. L. R. 176=244 Cr. L. J. 960 ; 50 C. 564=72 Ind. Cas. 372 ; 97 Ind. Cas. 664. Bull set at large on the death of a relative is not property. 9 A. 348=A. W. N. 1887, 73. It is not correct for conviction under this section that there must be proof of theft. 96 Ind. Cas. 869=27 Cr. L. J. 1013.

Believe.—The word "believe" is a very much stronger word than "suspect" and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. 17 Cr. L. J. 25=32 Ind. Cas. 153=3 ; Cr. L. J. 969=A. I. R. 1929 Oudh. 213 ; see also 134 Ind. Cas. 401=32 Cr. L. J. 1184=8 O. W. N. 517 ; 134 Ind. Cas. 401=8 O. W. N. 517=32 Cr. L. J. 1184=6 Luck. 658=1932 Cr. C. 592=A. I. R. 1932 Oudh. 25. Where neither receiving nor retaining of stolen property by accused is proved, accused need not prove absence of knowledge or belief that property was stolen one. A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 359=1933 Cr. C. 1335.

Knowing or having reason, etc.—The Receiver should know or have reason to believe the goods to be stolen, but it is immaterial whether or not he knows who stole them. The offence made punishable is not the receiving stolen property from any particular person, but receiving such property knowing it to be stolen. The receiver must have a dishonest intention, but whether he takes the goods for some purpose of profit or gain to himself, or merely to assist the theft or in order to conceal them, this taking cannot but be intended to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss, and is therefore dishonest.—Morgan and Macpherson, 372 ; 1913 M. W. N. 696 ; A. W. N. 1898, 70.

Guilty knowledge.—In order to sustain a charge of dishonest receipt of stolen property "guilty knowledge" at the time of the receipt is necessary. 1 Weir. 469 ; 4 M. H. C. App. 42 ; 2 Cr. L. J. 189. A. W. N. 1883, 17. There can be no hard and fast rule as to time, within which the stolen article should be found with accused, to hold him guilty of being in possession of stolen articles but two and a half months after a dacoity is not a long time. 103 Ind. Cas. 62=28 Cr. L. J. 638=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 277. Mere suspicion on the accused's part that property was dishonestly acquired is not enough to make person guilty under this section. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 264. In cases of long lapse of time between theft and discovery of stolen property, the onus to prove innocent possession is not on the accused. 1928 Lah. 687. Mere suspicion is not sufficient. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 327.

Proof.—To support a charge of receiving stolen property, the prosecution must prove, 1st, that the property is "stolen property," that is, that it comes within the definition of s. 410, having been obtained by some one of the offences there mentioned ; 2nd, the receiving or retaining of the property by the accused person ; 3rd the guilty knowledge of the accused. His dishonest purpose may be inferred if the above matters, are satisfactorily proved and left unexplained. As to the proof of the receiver's guilty knowledge, from the caution necessary in this sort of traffic, it must often happen that no express disclosure is made to him, and yet he knows the property to have been stolen as well as if he had actually witnessed the theft. In this, as in other cases, it is sufficient if circumstances are proved which, to persons of ordinary understanding in the situation of the accused person, must have led to the conclusion that the property was stolen or otherwise dishonestly acquired. Thus, if ornaments, bundles of clothes of various kinds or moveables of any sort from persons destitute of property and without any lawful means of acquiring it, and especially if it is proved that the property was brought at untimely hours and under circumstances of evident concealment, it may well be concluded that it was received with a full understanding of the guilty mode by which it has been acquired. And this will be still further confirmed, if it appears that the property was purchased for a sum far below its real value, or was concealed in places not usually employed for keeping such property, or if the marks on it are effaced, or if false or inconsistent stories are told as to the mode of its acquisition. Another circumstance from which such guilty knowledge may be inferred is that the property has been received from a notorious thief or one from whom stolen property has, no previous occasions, been received.—Morgan and Macpherson, 373 ; A. W. N. 1883, 17. Before a conviction, can be had under this section the possibility of the accused having obtained the goods of which he is found in possession by legitimate means must be excluded. 62 Ind. Cas. 867.

Where the only facts proved are, that certain stolen property was given to the accused by a third person to raise a loan on that the accused raised a loan and that the accused had similar dealings with such third, person held, that the last matter was irrelevant and that the evidence was insufficient to prove dishonest intention. A. W. N. 1885, 27. Where a person is charged with receiving or being in possession of property alleged to have been stolen, an important factor is the value of the property and as to this the Court should insist on having direct evidence as the accused is entitled to have some sworn testimony of value which he can cross-examine. 56 Ind. Cas. 856=21 Cr. L. J. 552. The finding of the Appellate Court, viz, "The evidence to implicate the accused is that they were all in a house one day disputing as to what was to be done with the booty and a dozen people were seen discussing as to how the booty was to be divided" is sufficient to sustain a conviction under ss. 411 and 414 I. P. Code. 7 Pat. L. T. 567=27 Cr. L. J. 657=94 Ind. Cas. 705. It is for the prosecution to prove that the accused received the property dishonestly. 29 Cr. L. J. 594.

The mere fact of possession of stolen property is not in all cases sufficient to warrant the inference that the accused was in possession of it dishonestly and to cast upon him the onus to displace the inference of dishonesty. 122 Ind. Cas. 586=31 Cr. L. J. 437=A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 353. Possession of stolen things nine months after loss does not amount to possession soon after theft. A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 85. A man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft may be presumed to be either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be the stolen unless he can account for his possession. 149 Ind. Cases.—The only evidence against an accused person that, in the presence of several persons, he pointed out a part of the stolen property buried in a grave yard, is insufficient to establish his guilt under s. 411. 32 P. Where all that is proved against the accused person is that he is receiver of stolen property knowing it to be stolen, and the evidence falls short of showing that this offence, of receiving was a repeated offence, held that the conviction of the accused as having received the property of a particular person is bad in law. 9 A. Where the stolen article is of an ordinary make and there is nothing peculiar in it, the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant of an ordinary position alone as to its identification is not sufficient for finding that it does not belong to the accused, specially where it has been equally contradicted by a witness on the other side. 22 P. W. The mere fact that a person was in possession of a stolen animal and he sold it to another is not in itself sufficient for his conviction under this section, and his denial of having any connection with the animal does not prove his guilty knowledge, especially when there is some enmity between the alleged vendor and the vendee. 34 P. A person who has obtained possession of property by criminal breach of trust is liable to be punished for the breach of trust only, but not for an offence under s. 411. 2 N. W. P. 312. The fact that a person is in possession of stolen property and does not account for it is, although suspicious, not sufficient to convict him of an offence under s. 411=6 A. 224=A. W. N. 1884, 55. Possession of Currency Notes of not large value a year and a half after their theft, is not in itself evidence of any guilty knowledge on the part of the possessor so as to support a conviction for dishonest retention of stolen property. In such a case, the fact that the accused gave a false explanation of his possession is not sufficient to warrant his conviction. 1912 M. W. N. 362=11 M. L. T. 186=15 Ind. Cas. 315=13 Cr. L. J. 475. It is not sufficient to show that the accused person was careless or had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired. 29 B. 449=7 Bom. The offence of receiving or retaining stolen property is not one of those offence mentioned in s. 562 of Cr. Pro. Code, as it is punishable under s. 411 or s. 414 I. P. Code with more than two years' imprisonment. 2 Bom. L. R. 343. The accused purchased a shop-keeper's weight from a beggar boy without making any enquiry of the boy. Held that these circumstances did not justify the inference that the accused either knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen property. 5 Bom. The mere fact of possession of stolen articles, not of an unusual character and such as easily pass from hand, to hand, does not justify a conviction under s. 411 of the Penal Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 594. But the possession of stolen property, immediately after it has been stolen, affords a strong presumption, that the person in whose possession it is, is either the actual thief or a receiver with a guilty knowledge; and the presumption is strengthened, if the person, in whose possession the stolen property is, fails to give a satisfactory account of the manner in which he acquired such possession or gives a false account, or gives accounts which are contradictory, or if the property is secreted. 11 C. 160; 13 M. Where the disappearance of a document from records of an office and substitute of a forged one in its place were proved and the genuine document was found in the possession of the accused, the servant of the person to further whose civil suit the substitution was made, held, that it would raise a presumption that the accused was retaining stolen property with a dishonest intention. 21 C. 328. In order to convict a person of an offence under s. 411, I. P. Joint-trial.—Separate trial is the rule. Joint-trial is an exception. Where more than one offence of theft is committed persons in possession of such property cannot be jointly tried. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 327.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

412. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property, the possession whereof he knows or has reason to believe to have been transferred by the commission of dacoity, or dishonestly receives from a person, whom he knows or has reason to believe to belong or to have belonged, to a gang of dacoits, property which he knows or has reason to believe to have been stolen, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—For one description of cases of receiving stolen property, namely, the cases in which property is known by the receiver to have been acquired by the offence of dacoity or is received from a dacoit, it was thought fit specially to provide a heavier punishment. The receiver, in these cases, may be punished as severely as those who commit dacoity.—Morgan and Macpherson 374. The bare discovery of stolen property and arms in joint family house is not such evidence of possession on the part of each of its members as would form a sufficient basis for conviction. 22 A. 445. But the fact of stolen property being found concealed in a man's house would ordinarily be sufficient to raise a presumption that he knew the property to be stolen property, but not to prove that he knew that it had been acquired by dacoity. Rat Un. C. Cr. 184 ; See. 7 W. R. Cr. 199 : 9 W. R. Cr. 16. To support a conviction under s. 412, it is not sufficient to show that the accused knew the property to be stolen property, it must be proved that they knew or had reason to believe that its possession had been transferred by the commission of dacoity or that, being stolen property, they received it from a person whom they knew or had reason to believe belongs or belonged to a gang of dacoits. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 756 ; see also U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. 1, 72 ; 6 B. 731. The fact of stolen property being found concealed in a man's house would ordinarily be sufficient to raise a presumption that he knew the property to be stolen property, but not to prove that he knew that it had been acquired by dacoity. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 184 = Cr. Rg. 10-10-1882. The mere knowledge of the place of concealment does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the person having such knowledge actually received the articles stolen or participated in the act of concealment. 1 P. In a case of identification of ornaments of small value the opinion of the assessors is of considerable value as they are well acquainted with the ways and habits of men of ordinary standings. 25 Cr. L. J. 1291 = A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 452. Where in a case of dacoity the Judge charged to the jury saying that if the articles were stolen properties and where found in possession of the accused it is sufficiently proved that they were thieves or dacoits and the rebuttable presumption that arises in law is that the accused are either thieves or dacoits until they succeed by adducing sufficient proof in establishing their innocence. 42 C. L. J. 212 = 90 Ind. Cas. 542. 413. Whoever habitually receives or deals in property which he knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment or either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The common receiver or professional dealer in stolen property, is hereby made punishable.—Morgan and Macpherson, 374. The essence of the offence under this section is the habitual, that is to say, constant receipt or dealing in goods which the prisoner knew or had reason to believe, were stolen. A man cannot be said to be habitually receiving stolen goods who may receive the proceeds of a number of different robberies from a number of different thieves on the same day ; but in addition to the receipt from different persons there must be a receipt on different occasions and on different days. 19 C. 190 ; 13 P. on the approver's statement about the accused having been present at a meeting held for the purpose of forming the gang, and where it was because that statement was disbelieved that the prosecution failed and where the approver's statement was in fact part of the material on which the prosecution for the offence under s. 413 I. P. Code, had been instituted but that prosecution would be based entirely on the evidence as to the discovery of the stolen property in the accused's house, which, it was held in the former trial, did not prove his membership of the gang. Held, that the two trials were not based on the same facts and s. 403 did not apply. 26 P. L. R. 470=88 Ind. Cas. 185=26 Cr. L. J. 1077.

Procedure—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

414. Whoever voluntarily assists, in concealing or disposing of, or making away with, property which he knows or has reason to believe to be stolen property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—Those whose dealing with stolen property is not of such a kind as to make them guilty of dishonestly receiving or retaining it, may be punished under this section. Assistance given by aiding the concealment or destruction, or by promoting the sale, of the stolen property, if it is given voluntarily, by a person who knows or who has reason to believe that the property is stolen, constitutes the offence.—Morgan and Macpherson. 375 ; 29 B. 449=7 Bom. Code is a very much stronger word than "suspect" and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. It is not sufficient to show that the accused was careless or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired. 6 B. 402=6 Ind. Of Cheating.

Scope of the offence of cheating.—The provisions for the proper punishment of some of the aggravated forms of cheating are contained in other chapters of the code than the present one (of offence against property) wherein cheating is defined, viz, in the chapter of offence relating to the coin, to weights and measures, to documents and to trade or property marks. The practice of intentional deceit for purposes of gain or to induce a person to act in such a way as to cause damage or harm to himself is an offence made punishable by the Code under this head. It is important that the law should in no case encourage deceit or falsehood, and that it should impose restraints on those who practise deception. But the legislator cannot go so far as to establish the rule of morality as a part of the rule of law. Many false pretences and many representations calculated and intended to mislead are morally wrong and deserving of punishment; but a Penal Code cannot adopt so severe a standard as the moral law whereby to measure the conduct of men. It is by public opinion, the opinion of the general body of the people, that restraints and punishments must in such cases be imposed. It would be highly inexpedient to punish as a criminal every dependent who obtains pecuniary favour by false profession of attachment to a patron, every legacy-holder who obtains a bequest by cajoling a rich testator, every debtor who moves the compassion of his creditors by over-charged pictures of his misery, every petitioner who, in his appeals to the charitable represents his distresses as wholly unmerited, when he knows that he has brought them on himself by intemperance and profusion.

"In dealings between buyers and sellers, frequently even in tolerably honest transactions, there happens an exaggeration on the one side and a depreciation on the other of the value of the thing sold which may be morally reprehensible, but with which the penal law cannot deal. If all the misrepresentations and exaggerations, in which men indulge for the purpose of gaining at the expense of others, were made crimes, not one day would pass in which many thousands of buyers and sellers would not incur the penalties of law—A very large part of the ordinary business of life is conducted all over the world, and no where more than in India, by means of conflict of skill, in the course of which, deception to a certain extent perpetually takes place. The moralist may regret this but the legislator sees that the result of the attempt of the buyer and seller to gain an unfair advantage over each other is that in the vast majority of cases, articles are sold for the prices which it is desirable that they should fetch; and therefore he does not think it necessary to interfere. It is enough for him to know that all this great mass of falsehood practically produces the same effect which would be produced by truth; and that any law directed against such falsehood would, in all probability, be a dead letter, and would if carried into rigorous execution, do more mischief in a month than all the lies which are told in the making of bargains through all the bazars of India produce in a century."—Morgan and Macpherson.

415. Whoever, by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver Cheating. any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property, or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes, or is likely to cause, damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation, or property, is said to "cheat."

Explanation.—A dishonest concealment of facts is a deception within the meaning of this section.

Illustrations.

(a) A, by falsely pretending to be in the Civil Service, intentionally deceives Z, and thus dishonestly induces Z, to let him have on credit goods for which he does not mean to pay. A cheats.

(b) A, by putting a counterfeit mark on an article, intentionally deceives Z into a belief that this article was made by a certain celebrated manufacturer, and thus dishonestly induces Z to buy and pay for the article. A cheats.

(c) A, by exhibiting to Z a false sample of an article, intentionally deceives Z into believing that the article corresponds with the sample, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to buy and pay for the article. A cheats.

(d) A, by tendering in payment for an article a bill on a house with which A keeps no money, and by which A expects that the bill will be dishonoured, intentionally deceives Z, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to deliver the article, intending not to pay for it. A cheats.

(e) A, by pledging as diamonds articles which he knows are not diamonds, intentionally deceives Z, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend money. A cheats.

(f) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to repay any money that Z may lend to him, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend him money, A not intending to repay it. A cheats.

(g) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to deliver to Z a certain quantity of indigo-plant which he does not intend to deliver, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to advance money upon the faith of such delivery. A cheats; but, if A, at the time of obtaining the money, intends to deliver the indigo-plant, and afterwards breaks his contract, and does not deliver it, he does not cheat, but is liable only to a civil action for breach of contract.

(h) A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A has performed A's part of a contract made with Z, which he has not performed, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to pay money. A cheats.

(i) A sells and conveys an estate to B. A, knowing that, in consequence of such sale he has no right to the property, sells or mortgages the same to Z without disclosing the fact of the previous sale and conveyance to B, and receives the purchase or mortgage-money from Z. A cheats.

Object of the section.—In order to bring a case within the 1st part of the section, it is essential in the first place, that the person who delivers the property should have been deceived before he makes the delivery and in the second place, that he should have been induced to do so fraudulently or dishonestly. The object of this section is to make it cheating to obtain property by deception in all cases where the property is fraudulently or dishonestly obtained. However immoral a deception may be, it does not constitute the offence of cheating, if its object is only to cause a distribution of property which the law recognises as rightful; there must be an intention to acquire or retain wrongful possession of that to which some other person has a better claim, and that other person is entitled to recover by law; in all such cases the object is wrongful gain attended with wrongful loss. 2 C. L. J. 524. The damage or harm referred to in this section must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must necessarily be likely to follow from them, Ibid; 17 C. 606. Mere silence on the part of the accused would not amount to deception. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I. 255. In order to find whether a person is guilty of cheating, the Court has to take into consideration the cumulative force and effect of all the surrounding circumstances. 1 Weir 476; See also 23 Cr. L. J. 443; 31 Ind. Cas. 353; 34 P. R. Cr. 1919.

Fraudulently or dishonestly.—The word "fraudulently" used in this section together with the word "dishonestly" means something different from "dishonestly." The word is not confined to transactions in which there is wrongful gain on the one hand, or wrongful loss on the other, either actual or intended. The word "defraud" may or may not imply deprivation, either actual or intended. 32 C. 775=9 C.W.N. 897=1 C.L.J. 469; see also 64 Ind. Cas. 33. The words "fraudulently" and "dishonestly" do not govern the whole of the definition. They do not apply to the second part of the definition. 20 P. R. 1889. Illustrations (f) and (g) leave no doubt that an intention as to future, expressed falsely or dishonestly for the purpose of deceiving a person, could amount to deception as a constituent element. A. W. N. 1886, 262. Where the charge does not contain any allegation that the accused acted dishonestly or that he deceived the complainant the charge should be set aside and the proceeding quashed. A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 169=34 Cr. L. J. 1049=145 Ind. Cas. 617. It is not necessary to constitute cheating that wrongful gain should accrue from the party deceived. 16 Cr. L. J. 753=31 Ind. Cas. 353.

Deception.—This section does not in any manner limit the mode in which the deception may take place, nor is it necessary that the deception should be by express words, but it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself. 32 C. 941=9 C. W. N. 1006; 18 A. L. J. 408.

Sale.—To constitute the offence of cheating by taking delivery of property, there should be deceit at the time when delivery is taken and the seller should be fraudulently and dishonestly induced to deliver the property in consequence of such deceit. 9 Ind. Cas. 458; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 546.

What constitutes offence.—Under section 415 unless and until damage or harm is proved the offence of cheating is not completed. 148 Ind. Cas. 690=35 Cr.

L. J. 872=A. I. R. 1934 Pesh. 5. The burden is on the prosecution to prove fraud or dishonesty on the part of the accused. There must be active deception by which a person is fraudulently induced to deliver property or there must be dishonest concealments of facts causing damage. 60 C. 262=1933 Cr. C. 502=A. I. To constitute the offence of cheating, it is enough to allege that the property obtained was in the possession of the person defrauded and it is not necessary to allege that such property belonged to him. 1 Weir 471=1 M. H. C. 31. It must be proved that the person who was made to deliver property etc., or to do or omit to do anything, which causes or is likely to cause him danger in body, mind, reputation or property, and which he could not have otherwise done. The offence is not committed if a third party, on whom no deception has been practised, sustains pecuniary loss in consequence of the accused's act. 25 P. R. 1904 Cr.; 10 P. L. R. 1905. Certain retail dealer induced their creditors to give time and soon after vacation intervened and they removed the goods. Held, that they are guilty of cheating. 23 A. L. J. 433=87 Ind. Cas. 426. Negotiations between the cheat and the persons cheated does not create a new contract between the parties and such negotiations make no difference to his criminal liability for an offence which is not compoundable. 26 Cr. L. J. 1602. To convict a person for cheating, it is necessary to show that there is a proximate connection between deception practised on the complainant and his being induced to part with some property. If the connection is too remote or very indirect the offence of cheating would not be complete. 26 Cr. L. J. 213=83 Ind. Cas. 997=A. I. R. 1924 All. 209. Sending an insured letter containing Khilafat notes does not amount to cheating. 26 Cr. L. J. 209=83 Ind. Cas. 993=A. I. R. 1924 All. 205. Under this section proximate and natural result and not a vague and contingent one is to be taken into account. 52 C. 188=85 Ind. Cas. 641. The delivery contemplated by this section is "delivery to any person" a phrase which will include even an agent for that purpose. 1927 M. W. N. 221=101 Ind. Cas. 484=28 Cr. L. J. 452=A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 544=52 M. L. J. 511. In the absence or dishonest intention, a judgment-debtor is not guilty by mere dishonour of a cheque. A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 292. The essence of an offence under this section is (1) that there must be deception practised upon a person, (2) that by that deception the person must be induced to do or omit to do something which he would not have done or omitted to do if he has not been so deceived (3) that such act or omission must cause or be likely to cause, the person deceived damage or harm in body, mind, reputation or property. To constitute the offence of cheating under s. 415 of the Penal Code the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused to one person deceived in mind, body, reputation or property must be the necessary consequence of the act done by the person of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom. The mere possibility of harm or damage however remote is insufficient. 34 P. R. Cr. 1919=48 Ind. Cas. 877=20 Cr. L. J. 77; 18 N. L. R. 52=67 Ind. Cas. 619=23 Cr. L. J. 443; 26 Bom. L. R. 211=81 Ind. Cas. 926. In the absence of dishonest inducement the charge could not be entertained. 21 A. L. J. 321=1923 All. 431. No offence under s. 413 is committed by untrue praise of goods offered for sale. A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 605=26 Cr. L. J. 921=29 C. W. N. 362=86 Ind. Cas. 985.

To constitute cheating within clause (ii) of this section it is necessary (1) that the person deceived must have acted under the influence of the deceit (2) that the facts must establish damage, or (3) that the damage must not be too remote. 51 C. 250. The word delivery contemplated by this section is "delivery to any person" a phrase which will include even an agent for that purpose. 101 Ind. Cas. 484=28 Cr. L. J. 452=A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 544. In order to bring a case within the second part of s. 415 I. P. Code damage or harm caused or likely to be caused, must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom, and the law does not take into account remote possibilities that may follow from the act. 35 P. L. R. 666=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 833. Mere criminal breach of trust does not constitute an offence under this section. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 404. In case of payment by cheque an offence of cheating is made out if the accused knew that the cheque would not be met. 32 Bom. L. R. 562=A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 179.

Intentionally.—The word "intentionally" in the second branch of the definition, only applies to the act or omission which the person deceived is induced to do, or omit to do, and it is not necessary in order to sustain a charge under that branch of the definition, that the accused person should also have intended to cause harm or damage as, the result of such act or omission. 36 P. R. 1888 Cr.

Cases.—A person employed as a clerk in charge of the renewal of licences for hand carts received Rs. 2 for each such renewal, whereas he ought to have taken Rs. 1-14-0. He was charged with cheating and evidence was produced showing that he had taken two annas in excess from persons other than those named in the charge; held, that such evidence was inadmissible either under s. 24 or under s. 15 of the Evidence Act. 8 A. L. J. 1269=12 Ind. Cas. 987=12 Cr. L. J. 611. An attempt to deceive by a false representation of facts, involves that the person charged should have taken some steps towards the communication of the representation to the person whom it was intended to deceive. 8 C. W. N. 278=1 Cr. L. J. 124. Where the accused hired certain property from the complainant for use at a wedding, and advanced a portion of the hire, promising in writing to pay the balance and to restore the goods when the wedding was over, being fully aware that there was to be no wedding, and intending, when he got the property, to apply for its attachment before judgment as belonging to another person against whom he had brought a suit, held that the accused was guilty of cheating. 3 N. W. P. 16; see also 3 N. W. P. 17. Inducing a Karkun to deliver a warrant of attachment by false representation is an offence under this section. 6 Bom. L. R. 375. But to induce a son to pay his father's debt, by acting on his fear of consequences to his father, does not seem to come within the definition of the crime of cheating. W. R. 1864 Cr. 25. The mere taking of money one day and dishonestly running away without paying it the next day is not necessarily cheating. 5 W. R. Cr. 5. Where reward was taken from father of abducted girl for making search for girl and restoring her to her father, but person taking the reward does not keep his promise, conviction of the person under s. 415 is not justified in absence of proof that he had practised any deception on the father of the girl. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 516. Where the accused sent a letter to his creditor and insured it for a sum of money but when the addressee opened it he found blank sheet of paper within the envelope, held that the accused was liable to be convicted under s. 415. 145 Ind. Illustration (f)—Deceiving in s. 415 does not necessarily require that there should be any representation in words. A dishonest concealment of facts is a deception within the meaning of the section, where the concealment is of something while there is a duty to disclose. The deceit referred to in the section and the illustration may clearly be by conduct. The nature of the transaction itself may imply an assertion. 56 B. 204=A. L. R. 1931 Bom. 243. 416. A person is said to "cheat by personation" if he cheats by pretending to be some other person or by knowingly substituting one person for another, or representing that he or any other person is a person other than he or such other person really is.

Explanation.—The offence is committed whether the individual personated is a real or imaginary person.

Illustration.

(a) A cheats by pretending to be a certain rich banker of the same name. A cheats by personation.

(b) A cheats by pretending to be B, a person who is deceased. A cheats by personation.

Scope.—Where there is cheating and it is effected by any of the following deceptions, the offence will, it seems, amount to cheating by personation. First by pretending to be some other person :—as if A pretends to be a certain rich banker of the name name. Secondly, by taking a name not his own :—as if A pretends to be B, a person who is deceased. Thirdly by taking a title or addition to which he has no right :—as if A takes the title of Raja having no right to the title. Fourthly, by pretending to be of a country of which he is not :—as if A, an East Indian pretends to be an African. Fifthly, by pretending to be of a calling of which he is not :—as if A falsely pretends to be a clergyman. Sixthly :—by pretending to be of a family of which he is not :—as if A pretends to be a member of one of the Sovereign Houses of India. Seventhly :—by falsely pretending to hold or to have held any office, real or imaginary. Eighthly :—by falsely pretending to be related by blood or marriage to any person real or imaginary :—as if A falsely pretends to be married to B, an heiress. Ninthly :—by falsely pretending to be in the employ of any person, real or imaginary :—as if A falsely pretends to be the agent of a great commercial house in Europe, or to be the vakil of a native prince, etc., There may be personation without any false pretence made in words :—Morgan and Macpherson. 385

Four students, who were entitled to travel at a reduced rate, were mentioned in a certificate which was properly signed by the proper authority and endorsed by the Railway Company. The accused, who was not one of the four was also entitled to travel at the reduced rate, as a student, and there is no rule prohibiting the transfer of a student's ticket. On the presentation, by the accused, of the endorsed certificate containing the names of 4 persons eligible for concession tickets, the Railway Company issued a pass for passenger tickets and arrested the accused who was convicted. Held that the conviction was bad, as it cannot be assumed that the accused intended to use the pass for persons who were not entitled to travel at the reduced rates. 7 M. In a suit or pre-emption, a consent decree was passed on plaintiff's agreeing to pay a certain sum in cash and to discharge a prior incumbrance. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that the defendant, the vendee, had, after the purchase but before the suit, mortgaged the property. But there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff would not have consented to pay the consideration, had he been aware of the charge created by the vendee. Held, that there was not obligation on the vendee to disclose the existence of the mortgage, and that consequently, his omission to do so would not constitute the offence of cheating. 27 A. 302=A. 418. Whoever cheats with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause wrongful loss to a person whose interest in the transaction to which the cheating relates, he was bound either by law or by a legal contract, to protect, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The aggravated form of cheating which is punished by this section is committed when the person who cheats stands in some relation of trust or confidence to the person cheated either as a clerk, servant or agent generally, or as a person employed on a particular occasion only, as a broker employed to buy or sell certain goods, as auctioneer employed to sell property, 'etc. Whoever undertakes to act as the agent of another person, whatever may be the nature of the agency, is bound by law to protect within the scope of such agency his employer's interests. Cheats by persons like those who are punished when their offence amounts to the criminal breach of trust by sections 407, 408 and 409 appear to be within this section. The deception must not be only intentional, but also with the knowledge that it is likely to cause wrongful loss."—Morgan and Macpherson. 386. 420. Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security; or anything which is signed or sealed, and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—An increased punishment may be awarded where the cheating causes any property to be delivered “dishonestly” that is where it is of the kind which the first clause of the definition in s. 415 describes; where it causes a valuable security as a title deed, bond bill of exchange, receipt, etc., to be made, altered or destroyed, or where it causes such a document as a deed, bond, bill of exchange, receipt, etc., which has been prepared, but which still continues in the hands of the person who will be bound thereby and has not yet taken effect or come into operation—to be made that is completed and brought into force by delivery, etc., altered, or destroyed—Morgan and Macpherson, 387 An offence under s. 420 of the Penal Code, does not consist merely in a fraudulent or dishonest representation but also requires the delivery of property by the victim. 12 P. Of Fraudulent Deeds and Dispositions of property.

421. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently removes, conceals, or Dishonest or fraudulent removal or concealment of property to prevent distribution among creditors. delivers to any person, or transfers or causes to be transferred, to any person, without adequate consideration, any property intending thereby to prevent, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby prevent, the distribution of that property according to law among his creditors or the creditors of any other person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—This section is intended to cover benami transaction in fraud of creditors rather than fraudulent preferences given to one bonafide creditor over another. In order to support a conviction under this section, it is necessary to prove that a transfer was (1) fraudulent (2) without adequate consideration and (3) with intent to prevent a rateable distribution among creditors. L. B. R. 1893-1900, 593. The Presidency Towns Insolvency Act does not take away a Magistrate's jurisdiction to try the insolvent for an offence under s. 421. 6 Rang. 664=30 Cr. L. J. 345=A. I. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

422. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently prevents any debt or demand due to himself or to any other person from being Dishonestly or fraudulently preventing debt being available for creditors. made available according to law for payment of his debts or the debts of such other person shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The object of the provisions under this head appears to be the punishment of dishonest and fraudulent debtors. The Civil law fixes the relative rights of debtors and creditors, and assigns to the latter remedies for the recovery of their just demands. It also provides for the distribution of a debtor's property among his creditors if he becomes insolvent and is unable to satisfy their claims in full. But if he endeavours to evade his just liabilities by a fraudulent disposal of his property, he is treated as a criminal. Ss. 421-24 seem to be intended to protect the general body of creditors from such fraudulent dealings and disposition of his property (whether by deeds or writings or otherwise) by the debtor as prevent or are likely to prevent the fair distribution of his property according to law. Morgan and Macpherson, 388 ; See also 22 W. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

423. Whoever dishonestly or fraudulently signs, executes, or becomes a party to, any deed or instrument which purports to transfer or subject to any charge any property or any interest therein, and which contains any false statement relating to the consideration for such transfer or charge, or relating to the person or persons for whose use or benefit it is really intended to operate, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The law does not make punishable every false statement in an instrument of transfer. The false statement must relate to the consideration or to the person to be benefited by it in order to become criminal. 37 M. 47. A false and exaggerated declaration of consideration in a sale-deed with the consent of the purchaser, for the purpose of defeating the claims of the pre-emptor is an offence under this section, the purchaser being guilty under s. 423. 19 P. Gist of the offence.—To sustain a charge under this section, there must be evidence of the persons intended to be defrauded by the concealment. 16 P. R. 1868 Cr. In the application of this section, care should be taken that civil rights are not made the basis of a criminal prosecution. 1 Weir 483. Of Mischief.

425. Whoever, with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, Mischief, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, causes the destruction of any property, or any such change in any property, or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously, commits "mischief".

Explanation 1.—It is not essential to the offence of mischief that the offender should intend to cause loss or damage to the owner of the property injured or destroyed. It is sufficient if he intends to cause, or knows that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to any person by injuring any property, whether it belongs to that person or not.

Explanation 2.—Mischief may be committed by an act affecting property belonging to the person who commits the act, or to that person or others jointly.

(e) A, having insured a ship, voluntarily causes the same to be cast away, with the intention of causing damage to the under-writers. A has committed mischief.

(f) A causes a ship to be cast away, intending thereby to cause damage to Z, who has lent money on bottomry on the ship. A has committed mischief.

(g) A, having joint-property with Z in a house, shoots the horse, intending thereby to cause wrongful loss to Z. A has committed mischief.

(h) A causes cattle to enter upon a field belonging to Z, intending to cause and knowing that he is likely to cause, damage to Z's crop. A has committed mischief.

Scope.—In the offences against property which have hitherto been considered, the purpose of the offender ordinarily is, to cause a wrongful gain of property; there is a transfer of property which is the subject of the offence from the rightful possessor to the offender or to some other person, or there is an appropriation or conversion of it by the offender. In the offence of mischief, there is not necessarily any transfer of property or any wrongful gain to the offender. The property continues with the possessor (unless the mischief extends to his absolute destruction), but it does not continue in his possession without change or diminution in value. Some injury has been sustained by it, and this injury, if it is intentionally caused, constitutes mischief. This offence is commonly perpetrated from vindictive motives; but absence of spite will be no answer to a charge of mischief, nor is it essential that any motive for the mischievous acts should be assigned, if the intention to cause wrongful loss is shown.—Morgan and Macpherson 397. Where the accused removed an obstruction from a property which they believed to be their own, the accused cannot be said to have caused any wrongful loss to the complainant under s. 425. 99 Ind. Cas. 414=28 Cr. L. J. 158=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 145. In order to constitute an offence under this section, something should be done to property contrary to its natural use. 1929 Mad. 5. It is no mischief if a person innocently removes a barricade placed by Municipality on a piece of land in front of his house, which impairs his ingress and egress to or from the said house. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 745. Where the accused blocked a channel the result of which was that the surplus water flowed direct on to the complainant's land and damaged his crop, and the site of the channel was the common property of all the accused. Held, that the act of the accused did not constitute the offence of mischief and that complainant's remedy for any damage he had sustained lay in an action in the Civil Courts. 8 M. L. T. 385=8 Ind. Cas. 128=11 Cr. L. J. 566; see also 1913 M. W. N. 179=19 Ind. Cas. 305=14 Cr. L. J. 209. The authority vested in the Criminal Court of punishing persons for acts of mischief is one which must be exercised with great caution and it must be very clear, before conviction, that the accused has brought himself within the true meaning of section 425 of the Penal Code. 6 W. R. Cr. 59. The act of impounding cattle does not amount to causing such a change in the situation of property as diminishes its utility or value. A. W. N. 1881, 153. The accused apprehending that the water in his tank would overflow, caused a breach in the bank of the complainant's field so as to let the surplus water from the tank overflow complainant's land. It was found that there were no crops in the field, and apart from the damage done to the bank no other damage was caused to the complainant. Held, that the accused was guilty of the offence of mischief. 49 Ind. Cas. 861=20 Cr. L. J. 237. Where there is a Hindu god over a chabutra of a mosque surrounded by a wall belonging to Mahomedans, the breaking of the wall for widening the doorway is an offence under s. 425. 95 Ind. Cas. 210=27 Cr. L. J. 898=A. I. R. 1926 All. 704. The word "change" in this section means physical change in composition or form and a change in value is not sufficient to constitute mischief. 105 Ind. Cas. 672=28 Cr. L. J. 960=A. I. R. 1928 Sind. 49. So mere omission to give light to house by failing to switch on the light is not an offence under this section. Ibid. If the landlord after the surrender of the land by the raiyyat, entered the land and dispossessed the under-raiyyat up-rooting seeds sown by him, he cannot be convicted under this section. 9 Pat. L. T. 728=110 Ind. Cas. 98=29 Cr. L. J. 642; 55 M. L. J. 767. Where the harvesting and removal of the by the raiyyat is dishonest, his conviction under s. 425 is right. 1931 M. W. N. 1049. The expression "wrongful loss or damage" means loss or damage by unlawful means. There is nothing unlawful in the accused installing an oil-engine in his own property and working it in any way he chooses, although if his working causes damage to a neighbour's property, the accused would be liable to a civil suit for damage. The damage cannot be said to be caused by any unlawful means and the accused is not liable to be convicted for mischief. A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 165.

Intention.—The intention to cause one wrongful loss or damage to the property is essential. An act which harms or lessens the value of property, if it is done by accident or mistake and not wilfully, does not make the doer an offender under the Penal Code, although he may be answerable in a civil suit for such damage. The wrongful loss may be to any person, or to the public, or to any class of the public or any community as the inhabitants of a particular village. Where the act which causes damage is done without any criminal intention to cause harm, and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property, the doer commits no offence (see section 81)—Morgan and Macpherson, 391. But in a Bombay case (Rat. Un. Cr. C. 690) it was held that the terms of this section were satisfied where there was a distinct finding as to the prisoners's knowledge and that the question of intention was material only as regards the sentence. See also 2 L. B. R. 158; 1 Weir 488. To sustain a conviction for the offence, it must be shown that there has been an intention or knowledge that, from the destruction of the property wrongful loss should or would accrue. 1 Weir 488; 25 W. Damage.—This section does not necessarily contemplate damage of a destructive character. It is only necessary that there should be an invasion of right and diminution of the value of one's property, caused by that invasion of right, which must have been contemplated by the doer of it when he did it, 12 C. 55 ; 12 C. 660 ; 7 B. 126 ; 9 B. 173 ; 6 B. To cut ripe crops which are grown, to be cut is not to destroy them or to affect them injuriously within the meaning of s. 425 and is not mischief. A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 182=11 O. W. N. 508=35 Cr. L. J. 797. The essence of the offence of mischief is that the property must be destroyed or have some change caused in it or its situation, which destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. It is not an offence to remove lateral support and cause damage unless the right to support has been acquired by prescription for 20 years. 68 Ind. Cas. 831=14 M.L.W. 728. Throwing a heavy stone at a cow that had strayed into the field and fracturing her leg is mischief. 18 Cr. L. J. 286=12 N. L. R. 188=38 Ind. Cas. 318.

Property.—All kinds of property whether moveable or immoveable may be the subject of this offence. Some change or diminution in value or utility must be caused to the property. Such damage should be of a nature serious enough to be worthy of notice—Morgan and Macpherson 390. The word "property" means tangible property capable of being forcibly destroyed, but does not include an easement. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 387. Postal receipt is such a property. 24 P. R. 1905 Cr. ; A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 973=930 M. W. N. 909.

Bonafide claim.—When the defence raised a bonafide claim of right, the Court should determine whether the accused acted with any such intent as is specified in this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 432 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 466 ; see also A. I. R. 1923 All. 428=21 A. L. J. 213=71 Ind. Cas. 645 ; 19 C. L. J. 729=5 Pat. L. W. 114=46 Ind. Cas. 40 ; 4 Pat. L. W. 291=44 Ind. Cas. 451 ; 40 Ind. R. 1934 All. 829.

Change.—The word "change" in s. 425 means physical change in composition or form. A. I. R. 1928 Sind. 49=22 S. L. R. 393=28 Cr. L. J. 960=105 Ind. Cas. 672. Mere omission to give light to the house failing to switch on the light does not involve change in the property even though it may diminish its value or utility, Ibid.

426. Whoever commits mischief, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—Under this section mischief must be done to the property belonging to another person but where a person's right is declared by a Civil Court he commits no mischief by damaging the property. 7 Pat. L. T. 79=93 Ind. Cas. 40=27 Cr. L. J. 392=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 244. Where there was no finding that the branches of trees were cut with intent to cause wrongful loss or damage but it appeared from the evidence that the branches were cut at the instance of the accused and with the knowledge that it was likely to cause wrongful loss, the accused can be convicted under this section. A. I. R. 1927 All. 610. In an offence of mischief, change i. e. physical change in property is necessary. Only diminishing its use or utility is not sufficient. 1928 Mad. 49. The essence of the offence of mischief is that the property must be destroyed or have some change caused in it or its situation, which destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. U. B. R. (1897-1901), Vol. I, 847. In order to convict of mischief under s. 426, the owner of an animal which has done damage to crops, it is not sufficient to show that he was guilty of carelessness in allowing it to stray but the prosecution is bound to show an intention on his part to cause wrongful loss or damage. Rat. Un. Cr. 187. Negligently allowing one's cattle to stray into another man's garden does not amount to mischief within the meaning of s. 426 I. P. Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 185 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 199. But where the accused was present when his buffaloes destroyed some road side trees, and being able to prevent the buffaloes from destroying the trees failed to do so, held that he was properly convicted under s. 426 I. P. Code. Rat. Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable in case of loss to private persons.—Triable by any Magistrate.

427. Whoever commits mischief and thereby causes loss or damage to the amount of fifty rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—In estimating the amount of the loss or damage caused, the actual loss only should be taken into consideration and not the damage which, in consequence of such loss, may be occasioned to the sufferer. It is not clear whether to support the charge under the section, the court must be satisfied not only that the offender intended to cause wrongful loss but also that he intended (or knew himself to be likely) to cause wrongful loss to the amount of fifty rupees or upwards. It will be reasonable to infer such an intention in the absence of satisfactory proof on behalf of the accused person, showing that he did not contemplate or intend to cause mischief to this amount.—Morgan and Macpherson, 303. Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable in case of loss to private persons—triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the first or second class.

428. Whoever commits mischief by killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering useless any animal or animals of the value of ten rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—It must be proved that the destruction or damage is of that wilful description which falls within the definition of mischief. But it must, it seems, be understood that the animal destroyed is the subject of property. Wild animals which have been captured as bears, tigers, etc., kept in cages, could probably be deemed within the meaning of the section.—Morgan and Macpherson, 304; U. B. R. 1905. Penal Code, 25.

Maiming.—In its primitive meaning the verb "to maim" involves the notion of mutilation of some part of the body useful for fighting. The framers of the Code did not intend this restricted meaning only of this expression. The expression would fairly include the amputation of any member, or the injury of an animal by which its speed, or endurance or use, was permanently diminished. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 404; U. B. R. 1905 Penal Code, 28; 1 Weir. 500; 1 Weir. 498; 34 P. R. 1888 Cr.; A. W. N. 1884. 87. The cutting off completely of the ears of an ass is maiming under this section. 22 M. L. T. 68.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

429. Whoever commits mischief by killing, poisoning, maiming or rendering Mischief by killing or maiming cattle, &c., of any value or any animal of the value of fifty rupees.

useless, any elephant, camel, horse, mule, buffalo, bull, cow or ox, whatever may be the value thereof, or any other animal of the value of fifty rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The words ‘bull’ or, ‘cow’ include the young of these animals, and the expression ‘any other animal’ does not mean an animal of the kind already mentioned, but refers to an animal of a different genus altogether. The section specifies the more valuable of the domestic animals without any regard to the age, but in respect of other kinds of animals not so specified, the section would not apply, unless the particular animal in question was shown to be of the value of fifty rupees or upwards. Gouri Mandal v. Jafar, 22 C. 467. No offence of mischief is committed in killing a bull branded and let loose according to the custom of Hindus on the death of a person, since such bull is no one’s property. A. W. N. 1884, 87; 1 Weir. 500; but see 34 P. R. 1888 Cr. Where the accused threw a stone at a buffalo, in order to drive it out of her backyard and the animal after running some distance, fell down and died; held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under s. 429. 1 Weir. 502.

Maiming.—The word ‘maiming’ in s. 429 involves the definition of the use of some limb or member involving a permanent injury and not a mere disfigurement. 17 Cr. L. J. 253=18 Bom. L. R. 289=34 Ind. Cas. 973. The cutting off of the ears of a horse amounts to ‘maiming’ within the meaning of this section. 21 M. L. J. 843. But where a person inflicts a wound on an animal with a spear whereby it is disabled for some days, this offence falls within s. 426 and not within this section. 3 Bom. L. R. 503. The cutting off of nearly one-half of one ear of a mare whereby the animal’s sense of hearing is not impaired, is not maiming. 18 Bom. L. R. 289. Killing of an animal by the thief does not merit double conviction for theft and mischief. 26 Cr. L. J. 277=84 Ind. Cas. 341=A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 34.

Intention.—The provision of this section requires that the offence of mischief must have been committed as the result of the acts specified therein and in order to constitute that offence it is necessary that the accused should either intend to cause or know that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage. 3 Cr. L. J. 107; See 14 C. P. L. R. Cr. 159; L. B. R. (1893—1900), 633; 7 Ind. Cas. 415. Where conviction both under this section and section 379 were held to be bad.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

430. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act which causes, or which he knows to be likely to cause, a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes, or for food or drink for human beings, or for animals which are property, or for cleanliness or for carrying on any manufacture, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—To constitute the offence, not merely loss should be proved, but also that it was wrongful loss and that accused intended to cause or knew he was likely to cause the loss. A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 577=26 Cr. L. J. 1100=88 Ind. Cas. 188=1925 M. W. N. 45. The offence under this section requires as an essential element of it that the accused had the intention to cause or the knowledge that their act was likely to cause wrongful loss to the complainant. 26 Cr. L. J. 1100. Guilty knowledge is essential to a conviction for the offence of mischief, and, in the absence of any consideration or discussion of the circumstances and the reasonableness or otherwise of the acts of the accused persons it is impossible to uphold a conviction for that offence. 52 Ind. Cas. 276=20 Cr. L. J. 612. To substantiate an offence under s. 430 the prosecution must prove that there has been unlawful and intentional interference on the part of the accused with the admitted or proved rights of the complainant. 32 C. L. J. 476=61 Ind. Cas. 665=22 Cr. L. J. 415. Where the accused was charged under s. 430 I. P. Code, for having erected a fence across a channel flowing through his land with the result that the supply of water to the complainant's land was reduced. Held, that in the absence of a claim of easement or contract for the supply of water by the complainant, the accused could not be convicted. 69 Ind. Cas. 95=23 Cr. L. J. 655=16 L. W. 793 ; 44 M. L. J. 234. Every person has a perfect right to do a particular act upon his own land, and if a person breaks open his bund or opens his own sluice, no one can complain of it, until some injurious consequence follows from it. As soon as such a consequence follows, the injury and not the original act, becomes a cause of action. In such a case the mischief consists not in breaking the bund or in opening the sluice but in flooding or withering up the complainant's crops. 21 S. L. R. 107=98 Ind. Cas. 49=27 Cr. L. J. 1233. Where a matter is prominently one for the Civil Court to decide, whether a bund was put up or not by one of the parties, there ought not to be a conviction for an offence under this section. 98 Ind. Cas. 474=27 Cr. L. J. 1354 ; see also 34 C. W. N. 86=50 C. L. J. 589=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 318. The words "diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes" in this section cannot be limited to those cases only where the water has been allowed either to go waste or has been diverted for a non-agricultural purpose. The section read as a whole also refers to cases where the water is intended for use by particular person for purposes of agriculture and is diverted by an accused person for his own purposes though of a like nature. 21 S. L. R. 107=98 Ind. Cas. 49=27 Cr. L. J. 1233. An offence under this section is particularly a grave form of the offence of committing mischief as defined in s. 425. It is necessary to prove in such cases the elements that constituted mischief under s. 425. No doubt a person who takes water from a tank causes loss but it should be shown that he has caused a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purpose. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 289. Accused knowingly diminishing supply of water without a bonafide claim is guilty, A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 704=26 Cr. L. J. 258=84 Ind. Cas. 322 ; see also 44 Ind. Cas. 582 ; 44 Ind. Cas. 580=34 M. L. J. 206=19 Cr. L. J. 356=23 M. L. T. 248. Person cutting bund and letting out some water is guilty under s. 430. 136 Ind. Cas. 592=13 P. L. T. 162=33 Cr. L. J. 313=1932 Cr. C. 407=A. I. R. 1932 Pat. 224. In order to prove an offence under s. 430 it is necessary to prove mischief as defined in s. 425 and it is also necessary to prove that the act committed is likely to cause a diminution of the supply of water for the various purposes mentioned in the section. A. I. R. 1934 All. 687=35 Cr. L. J. 1250=150 Ind. Cas. 1048 ; 1933 M. W. N. 427.

Object.—Injuries to a river or well or any natural or artificial channel or reservoir of water, or any work for the purpose of irrigation, if such injuries cause or are likely to cause a diminution of the supply by wrongfully drawing off or diverting water are punishable under this section. In some parts of India disputes about water for irrigation are numerous and are carried on with great violence. When two villages draw their supply from one tank and the scantiness of the supply renders it necessary that they should each be supplied for a regulated number of hours, it is not unusual for the people of one village to attempt undue appropriation during the night, an act which, if discovered by the rival village, ends in an affray of a very serious character. Such an act causing wrongful loss to individuals or to the public or community of the injured village will, it seems, be punishable under the present section. Mischief committed by drawing water used for domestic and other like purposes and thereby causing a diminution of the supply, will like wise be punishable under the section.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable with permission of Court—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or second class.

431. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act which renders, or which he knows to be likely to render, any public road, bridge, river or channel, natural or artificial, impassable or less safe for travelling or conveying property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Public road.—A path through a jungle is not a road in the sense in which that word is used in this section. L. B. R. (1893—1900) 629.

Scope.—In the definition of mischief, loss or damage to the public is mentioned. This section applies when the mischief is to a public road, navigable river, etc., and is of the kind mentioned. An obstruction or impediment caused not wilfully but by some negligent act or omission is an offence which is punishable not under this but under a preceding section (see section 283). Mischief caused to a private pathway, bridge, etc., is punishable under section 426.—Morgan and Macpherson, 395. See also U. B. R. (1892—1866) Vol. I. 260; 1 Weir 511.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or Second class.

432. Whoever commits mischief by doing any act which causes, or which he knows to be likely to cause, an inundation or an obstruction to any public drainage attended with injury or damage, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—Work of irrigation are within the protection of section 430. Wilful injuries to embankments where such injuries as are not punishable by a special law are punishable under this section. Works or public drainage such as those which exist or are in courses of construction in some of the Presidency towns or other big cities are included in the present section if such works are not constructed under a local or special Act containing the necessary provisions for their protection.—Morgan and Macpherson, 396. In order to constitute an offence under this section, it is not sufficient to prove probable consequential damage to other property. 1 Weir 512=4 M. H. C. App. 15

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

433. Whoever commits mischief by destroying or moving any light house or other light used as a sea-mark, or any sea mark or buoy or other thing placed as a guide for navigators or by any act which renders any such light-house, sea-mark, buoy, or other such thing, as aforesaid less useful as a guide for navigators, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

434. Whoever commits mischief by destroying or moving any land-mark fixed by the authority of a public servant, or by any act which renders such land-mark less useful as such, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Cases.—8 A. L. J. 925 ; 1 A. L. J. 619 ; 30 C. 1084.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

435. Whoever commits mischief by fire or any explosive substance, intending to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, damage to any property to the amount of one hundred rupees or upwards or (where the property is agricultural produce) ten rupees or upwards, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Legislative changes.—In this section the words quoted have been inserted by Act 18 of 1882 s. 10.

Scope.—When mischief is committed by means of fire or any explosive substance and the evidence enables the Court to conclude that the offender not only intended to cause wrongful loss, which intention is necessary to the committing of "mischief" but either intended or knew himself to be likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the amount of Rs. 100 there may be conviction under this section. If the evidence falls short of this, but is sufficient to show that mischief to the amount of 50 rupees has been caused, whether by fire or by any means whatever, the offender may be convicted under s. 427. If the offence proved is simple mischief and there is no aggravating circumstance in the case, the offender is punishable under section 426.—Morgan and Macpherson, 397. But an accused cannot be convicted both under this section as well as under s. 436 because when, in the same penal statute, there are two clauses applicable to the same act of an accused, cumulative punishments are not to be awarded unless it is so expressly provided in the statute. The case may be different where different statutes provided separate punishments for this same act, for the intention of the Legislature is to guard two distinct interests of different species. 11 B. H. C. 13.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

436. Whoever commits mischief by fire or any explosive substance, intending to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause the destruction of any building which is ordinarily used as a place of worship, or as a human dwelling, or as a place for the custody of property, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This highly penal provision is for the punishment of the offence mentioned in s. 435 when such offence is attended with the aggravating circumstance that the offender contemplated the destruction of a house, place of worship, or place used for the custody of property. The grass or mat huts of the lowest classes are placed on a level with the substantial, secure and valuable dwellings of the rich ; and it is left to the discretion of the Judge to distinguish in awarding punishment between cases of great criminality and those in which the injury done is inconsiderable. The word "building" must, however, it seems be understood to mean a structure of some permanence and fixedness, not a mere hut, or temporary erection.—Morgan and Macpherson, 398. See also 7 P. R. 1923 Cr. A thatched wall of an enclosure in which there are several thatched huts is a building. 7 P. R. 1903 Cr. Section 285 is not applicable where the act of the accused is wilful and not rash or negligent. To such a case s. 436 may be applicable. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 126. A man may commit mischief in certain cases on his own property. In such cases it seems that a person causing mischief by fire to his own house will be punishable under this Section. If death or hurt is caused by fire, the offender may be punished under the chapter of offences against the human body.—Morgan and Macpherson, 398 ; see also 8 Ind. Cas. 399. Whipping in addition to sentence under this section is not permissible. A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 111. In a case of mischief by fire, evidence of previous fires, unconnected with the charge under enquiry cannot be admitted. 20 C. W. N. 1267.

=17 Cr. L. J. 421=35 Ind. Cas. 981. It is absolutely necessary in order to convict the accused under s. 436; I. P. Code to prove that the building which he destroyed comes within the category of a building ordinarily used as a place of worship, as a human dwelling or as a place for the custody of property. The words "ordinarily use" in s. 436 I. P. Code do not mean that other buildings are from time to time used for such purposes, but they mean that the particular building which is the subject of the offence was itself used. 82 Ind. Cas. 54=25 Cr. L. J. 1190. It must be shown that the accused were from the very beginning actuated by the common motive to set fire to the house before a conviction could be had under ss. 436 and 149. 22 Cr. L. J. 267=60 Ind. Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

437. Whoever commits mischief to any decked vessel, or any vessel of a burden of twenty tons or upwards, intending to destroy or render unsafe, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby destroy or render unsafe, that vessel, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—Decked vessels of any size, however small, and such undecked vessels as the large river craft of Bengal and the class of native vessels engaged in the coasting trade and otherwise on the western coasts of India, appear to be meant. If life is endangered the offender may be dealt with under the provisions of the preceding chapter.—Morgan and Macpherson, 399.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

438. Whoever commits, or attempts to commit, by fire or any explosive substance, such mischief as is described in the last preceding section, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Example.—If A, having insured his ship, voluntarily causes or attempts to cause it to be set on fire and destroyed with the intention of causing damage to the insurer, he has committed an offence punishable under this section, although the vessel may be his own property.—Morgan and Macpherson. 399.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

439. Whoever intentionally runs any vessel aground or ashore, intending to commit theft of any property contained therein, or to dishonestly misappropriate any such property, or with intent that such theft or misappropriation of property may be committed, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The sense in which the word "vessel" is here used is explained by s. 48. In the great navigable rivers of Bengal and probably elsewhere, the crews of river craft, acting in league with persons on shore, sometimes run their vessels aground or ashore, and thus enable their confederates to plunder the cargo.—Morgan and Macpherson, 329.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

440. Whoever commits mischief, having made preparation for causing to any person death, or hurt, or wrongful restraint, or fear of death, or of hurt or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Of Criminal Trespass.

441. Whoever enters into or upon property in the possession of another with intent to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person in possession of such property, or, having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there with intent thereby to intimidate, insult, or annoy any such person, or with intent to commit an offence, is said to commit "criminal trespass."

Of Criminal Trespass.—The substantive offences which the Code makes punishable under this head of the chapter of offences against property, considered by themselves, are such as might be visited with a light punishment; but when they are attended with aggravating circumstances and above all when they are viewed in relation to some other offence, as murder, theft, etc., the commission of which is the main object of the offender, they become grave offences. The criminal trespass, in whatever form and whether aggravated or not, if it is preparatory to the commission of an offence against person or property, deserves severe punishment. "Criminal trespass" the offence which is first defined and punished, enters into almost all the subsequent offences which are contained under this division. Those penal provisions in fact punish this offence with various degrees of punishment when it is attended with certain aggravating circumstances. The trespass may be aggravated by the way in which it is committed or by the end for which it is committed,—Morgan and Macpherson, 400

Division of the chapter.—The division begins by defining the offences of (1) criminal trespass; (2) house-trespass; (3) lurking house-trespass (4) lurking house-trespass by night; (5) house-breaking; (6) house-breaking by night. The definition of the lower of these offences includes all cases which are within the definitions of the higher offences. The four last-named offences are house-trespasses, with different circumstances of aggravation; and house-trespass is by its definition a species of criminal trespass. When any of these offences, for instance house-trespass, is committed in order to the committing of another offence, theft for example, this purpose is treated, as will be seen, not as a distinct offence, but as an aggravation of the trespass.—Ibid 401.

Distinguishing nature of the crime.—But the offence itself is to be distinguished from those previously noticed, inasmuch as it does not necessarily imply dishonesty, fraud or deceit. The criminal trespasser whose object is "to intimidate, insult or annoy," for instance, has not necessarily any design against the property of the sufferer; perhaps his object is only a frolic. Ibid. 400.

Scope.—In this definition the entry and the intention with which a person enters are essentials. The latter part of the definition makes unlawful continuance on property equivalent to an unlawful entry, the intention being criminal.—Ibid, 401. Unlike several sections of the code where mens rea consists in intention or knowledge this section requires that the accused should either unlawfully enter upon property of another or having lawfully entered thereon continue to remain unlawfully with intent thereby to intimidate, insult, or annoy the person in possession of such property or with intent to commit the offence. 100 Ind. Cas. 829=28 Cr. L. J. 349=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 159; 27 A. 298; 18 Cr. L. J. 402. A trespasser cannot acquire possession by the very act of trespass. A true owner can re-enter but he must not use more force than is necessary. A. I. R. 1928 P. 124. Unlawfully entering on the property and continuing to remain there is a continuing wrong. A. I. R. 1928 P. 124. This section does not require the land to be in the actual possession of the complainant.

1928 Bom. 221. To constitute an offence under this section, there must be an actual personal entry by the person accused. 3 L. B. R. 278=5 Cr. L. J. 415. Unlawful entry followed by unlawful continuance is offence. A. I. R. 1933 All. 816=1933 A. L. J. 1418=1933 Cr. C. 1415. No fresh offence is committed by mere continuing trespass. 139 Ind. Cas. 609=1932 Cr. C. 500=33 Cr. L. J. 861=28 N. L. R. 57=A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 112; but see A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 124=6 Pat. 794.

Property.—The word “property” in s. 441 is sufficiently wide to cover any kind of property, either moveable or immoveable; it includes a ferry boat. 35 Cr. L. J. 949=A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 480=38 C. W. N. 665=1934 Cr. C. 688.

Entry into or upon property.—“Property” here, must from the nature of the provision, mean corporeal property, either land or a building tent or vessel; and possession would seem to mean actual occupation as contradistinguished from a constructive possession, or still more a vacant possession. It would seem, a person entitled to a right of way or other incorporeal right is not a person in possession of property within this definition and that there can be no criminal trespass “into or upon” such property.—Morgan and Macpherson, 401. In order to sustain a conviction for criminal trespass, it must be shown that the property was in possession of some person, other than the alleged trespasser. 28 P. R. 1878. Cr. The complainant in a prosecution for criminal trespass must be in physical as opposed to juridical or constructive possession. 10 Bur. L. T. 77; 17 Cr. L. J. 378; 67 Ind. Cas. 618; 74 Ind. Cas. 856; 74 Ind. Cas. 534; 16 A. L. J. 501; 12 A. L. J. 151. Constructive entry upon property by a servant is not an entry within the meaning of this section. To constitute an offence under this section, there must be an actual personal entry by the person accused, 5 L. B. R. 278=5 Cr. L. J. 415. Person not personally entering, but setting people to build, on another's land commits criminal trespass. 39 A. 722=19 Cr. L. J. 46=15 A. L. J. 793=42 Ind. Cas. 1006. Mere assertion by a person of his right to be in possession is no offence. 19 Cr. L. J. 629=45 Ind. Cas. 677. Entering the cattle pound with intent to commit an offence under s. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, amounts to criminal trespass. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 495=8 Lah. 331=28 Cr. L. J. 665=103 Ind. Cas. 201.

Intention.—The intention constitutes the entry criminal. Merely to trespass is not ordinarily such an offence; but when the trespass is in order to the commission of an offence (see section 40), or when it is to intimidate, to insult, or to annoy, it is published.—Morgan and Macpherson 401; 145 Ind. A person entering another's house after having taken all precautions to avoid discovery cannot be said to have entered with intent to cause annoyance to the persons in possession. 27 P. L. R. 385=96 Ind. Cas. 871=27 Cr. L. J. 1015. Intention cannot be inferred from the actual or probable results. It is necessary to show the actual intention to insult or annoy before the acts were complete, to constitute the offence under s. 441. 116 Ind. Cas. 783=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 111. A mere knowledge that the trespass is likely to cause insult or annoyance to the owner of the property does not amount to an intent to insult or annoy within the meaning of this section but where the trespasser knows that his trespass is practically certain in the natural course of events to cause insult or annoyance to the owner of the property, it is open to the Court to infer an intent to insult or annoy. It is a question of fact whether this presumption of intent is displaced by proof of any independent object of the trespass. 33 M. L. J. 729 (F. B.) ; 82 Ind. Cas. 149 ; 47 All. 855=26 Cr. L. J. 1273 ; A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 36 ; 12 P. R. 1906 ; 13 P. R. 1905 Cr. The essence of an offence under this section is the intent in committing the trespass and merely to trespass is not ordinarily an offence. It must be proved that some criminal intent was present in the mind of the accused and it does not at all follow that because an act is unlawful and is one that the civil law will restrain or for which it will compensate the injured party in damages, it is necessarily criminal. 81 Ind. Cas. 351 ; 75 Ind. Cas. 292. See also 41 M. 156 ; 47 Ind. Cas. 77 ; 13 C. L. R. 212 ; 82 P. R. 1906 Cr. ; 13 P. R. 1908 Cr.

Intimidate.—The word "intimidate" in this section must be understood in its ordinary sense to overawe, to put in fear, by a show of force or threats or violence and it may include use of actual force or accompanied by threat 13 Rat. 268=151 Ind. Cas. 894=25 Cr. L. J. 142=15 Pat. L. T. 392=A. I. R. 1934 Pat. 158=1934 Cr. C. 355.

Offence.—An unlawful act is not necessarily an offence. 26 A 193=A. W. N. 1903, 230. Where the accused trespassed upon the land intending to prevent the respondent by force from harvesting the crops which had been grown by the accused, it does not amount to an offence of criminal trespass or criminal force. 16 C. L. J. 271 : A. W. N. 1882, 228. Where the object of a trespass is to commit an offence, such offence must be possible on the part of the person to be convicted of the trespass. 47 Ind. Cas. 77=19 Cr. L. J. 881.

With intent to annoy.—A person entering another's house after having taken all precautions to avoid discovery cannot be said to have entered with intent to cause annoyance to the persons in possession. 27 P. L. R. 385. The word "annoy" in this section must be taken to mean "annoyance" that would generally and reasonably affect an ordinary person. 2 A 465. Mere knowledge of the possibility of annoyance resulting from an act of trespass is not sufficient. 26 B. 558 ; 24 W. R. Cr.

58. The annoyance must be in respect of the person in actual possession. 17 Cr. L. J. 378 ; 47 A. 855.

Knowledge.—Knowledge that annoyance will be caused by the act is sufficient. 10 O. W. N. 1078=A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 469=1934 Cr. C. 1393 ; see also 145 Ind. Cas. 626=1933 Cr. C. 1321=10 O. W. R. 1935 Sind. 20.

Remains there etc. If a person enters into property in the possession of another or remains there with an intent other than to intimidate, insult or annoy him or to commit any offence but with the knowledge that his act is likely or certain to cause annoyance or insult to the person in possession he is not guilty of criminal trespass. 33 M. L. J. 729 (F. B.) ; see also A. L. R. 1932 Nag. 210=A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 112=28 N. L. R. 57=139 Ind. Cas. 609.

Possession. Possession must be actual possession. 14 Cr. L. J. 633=21 Ind. Cas. 681=12 A. L. J. 151 ; 10 Bur. L. T. 77 ; but see A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 560. Possession must be physical possession and not merely construction. 1933 Cr. C. 1436=A. I. R. =1933 Sind. 396 In order to constitute possession dominion and consciousness of it is necessary. 145 Ind. Cas. 130=1933 Cr. C. 743=1933 A. L. J. 1338=34 Cr. L. J. 930=A. I. R. 1933 All. 437 ; see also A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 221=30 Bom. L. R. 631=29 Cr. L. J. 977=112 Ind. Cas. 97 ; Possession at the date of trespass must be found as a fact. 18 Cr. L. J. 761=41 Ind. Cas. 1307.

Cases.—In a charge under s. 454, conviction can be under s. 441. A. I. R. 1935 Pat. 129.

Any person in possession. The words "any person in possession" do not mean only a complainant in possession there being no authority for taking the offences of mischief and criminal trespass out of the general rule which allows any person to complain of a criminal act. 25 C. W. N. 425 ; see also 49 Ind. Cas. 99 ; U. B. R. (1899-1901) Vol. I. 352.

Bona-fide.—Where the accused have acted bona-fide, there is no question of criminal trespass. 1924 Mad. 862 ; 20 Ind. Cas. 219 ; 15 Ind. Cas. 317 ; 12 A. L. J. 790 ; 27 A. 296 ; 13 C. L. 442. Whoever commits criminal trespass by entering into or remaining House-trespass. in any building, tent, or vessel used as a human dwelling, or any building used as a place for worship, or as a place for the custody of property, is said to commit "house-trespass."

Explanation.—The introduction of any part of the criminal trespasser's body is entering sufficient to constitute house-trespass.

Building.—A dalan or entrance which was surrounded by a wall in which there are two door ways, but without doors, which was used for custody of property, was held to be a building. 10 P. R. 1879 Cr. A whera used for custody of property is a building within the meaning of this section. 1925 Lah. 117=6 Lah. L. J. 385 ; see also A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 28=6 Lah. 463=27 Cr. L. J. 38=91 Ind. Cas. 70. A court-yard partly surrounded on the front by a mud wall with no roof over it nor any door or gate-way is not a building or house within the purview of this section. 49 Ind. Cas. 864 ; 4 L. B. R. 24 ; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 279=6 L. L. J. 578=26 Cr. L. J. 383=84 Ind. Cas. 863, but see 55 P. R. 1879 Cr. But a thatched hut is such a building. 36 Ind. Cas. 584. See also 9 P. R. 1887 Cr. Entry into a cattle pen is not an offence under this section. 28 P. R. 1905 Cr. Entry in the enclosure is not house-trespass. 1928 All. 607 ; 1929 Mad. 135. A court-yard bounded by walls on all the sides without a door opening out any where, is not a building for the purposes of s. 442 I. P. Code. 77 Ind. Cas. 809=9 Lah. 623=25 Cr. L. J. 457. The expression "building" includes a structure whether covered or not and made of any materials whatever. 111 Ind. Cas. 459=29 Cr. L. J. 875 ; 131 Ind. Cas. 427=31 Cr. L. J. 268=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 414. Intention to use as a dwelling is a question of fact and depends on the facts of each case. A. I. R. 1929 Sind. 17=22 S. L. R. 466=29 Cr. L. J. 875=111 Ind. Cas. 459. A thatched hut built for residence, is a building used as a human dwelling within the meaning of s. 442. 17 Cr. L. J. 536=3 O. L. J. 493=36 Ind. Cas. 584.

Vessel.—A ferry boat cannot be held to be a vessel in the absence of evidence that the boat was ever used as a human dwelling. 149 Ind. Cas. 431=35 Cr. L. J. 949=38 C. W. N. 665=1934 Cr. C. 688=A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 480; see also A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 480=1935 Cr. C. 688=38 C. W. N. 665=A. L. R. 1934 Cal. 560=35 Cr. L. J. 949=149 Ind. Cas. 431.

Entry.—The mere putting of a hand into a hole in the wall without putting it through the hole is not entry into the house within the meaning of s. 442, I. P. Code. 4 Lah. 399=1923 Lah. 509.

Possession.—There cannot be any conviction under this section where the property is not in the possession of the complainant and where the accused had no intention of annoying him. 17 A. L. J. 334.

Custody of property.—5 N. W. P. 307.

Injury, annoyance, etc.—An accused who had no intention of causing annoyance to any one and took measure to avoid it cannot be convicted of an offence under this section even though a feeling of an annoyance be the inevitable consequence of being found out. 52 Ind. Cas. 274. In order to constitute an offence there must be an intention to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession. 81 Ind. Cas. 716; 2 Bur. L. J. 17; A.W.N. 1882, 224; 20 C. 65. Intention as to use of a particular structure depends upon particular facts. 1929 Sind. 17.

Bona-fide claim.—An entry into a house in assertion of a bona-fide claim of right cannot constitute criminal trespass which requires an intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession. 1925 P. 167; see also 75 Ind. Cas. 353 (2); 15 A. L. J. 808; 18 P. R. 1888 Cr.; 16 C. W. N. 1007; Rat. Un. Cr. 390.

443. Whoever commits house-trespass having taken precautions to conceal such house-trespass from some person lurking house-trespass. who has a right to exclude or eject the trespasser from the building, tent, or vessel which is the subject of the trespass, is said to commit "lurking house-trespass."

444. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass after sunset and before sunrise, is said to commit "lurking house-trespass by night."

Notes.—Vide 4 W. R. Cr. 19.

445. A person is said to commit "house-breaking," who commits house-trespass, if he effects his entrance into the house or any part of it in any of the six ways herein after described; or if, being in the house or any part of it for the purpose of committing an offence, or, having committed an offence therein, he quits the house or any part of it in any of such six ways, that is to say:—

First.—If he enters or quits through a passage made by himself; or by any abettor of the house-trespass, in order to the committing of the house-trespass.

Secondly.—If he enters or quits through any passage not intended by any person, other than himself or an abettor of the offence for human entrance; or through any passage to which he has obtained access by scaling or climbing over any wall or building.

Thirdly.—If he enters or quits through any passage which he or any abettor of the house-trespass has opened, in order to the committing of the house-trespass, by any means by which that passage was not intended by the occupier of the house to be opened.

Fourthly.—If he enters or quits by opening any lock in order to the committing of house-trespass, or in order to the quitting of the house after a house-trespass.

Fifthly.—If he effects his entrance or departure by using criminal force or committing an assault, or by threatening any person with assault.

Sixthly.—If he enters or quits by any passage which he knows to have been fastened against such entrance or departure, and to have been unfastened by himself or by an abettor of the house-trespass.

Explanation.—Any out-house, or building occupied with a house, and between which and such house there is an immediate internal communication, is part of the house within the meaning of this section.

447. Whoever commits criminal trespass shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Possession.—For a conviction under this section the finding on the point as to who was in possession of the land in dispute is necessary. 45 Ind. Cas. 677. Lessee of a District Board road for collection of tolls is not in possession of the road. 55 Ind. Cas. 721. Where possession is permissive at its inception subsequent refusal to move does not amount to criminal trespass. 26 P. L. R. 247.

Intention.—It is not necessary that intimidation, insult, or annoyance should be the primary intent with which the entry is made. It is sufficient if the intent to commit one or other is involved in the action. The presumption is against a person entering on property in possession of another without that other's consent except in strict accordance with law. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. 1, 264. In order to constitute the offence of criminal trespass, it must be proved that some criminal intent was present in the mind of the accused, and it does not follow that, because an act is unlawful and is one that the civil law will restrain, or for which it will compensate the injured party in damages it is necessarily criminal. 29 P. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

448. Whoever commits house-trespass shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

House-trespass.—To constitute the offence of house-trespass it is necessary that an entry should have been effected into the house or building. Mounting the roof of a house with intent to enter the house is not house-trespass nor even an attempt to commit house-trespass but merely a preparation for the offence of house-trespass. 12 Bur. L. T. 222. Entry on a verandah does not amount to house-trespass. 26 Ind. Cas. 306; see also, 15 P. R. 1907 Cr.; see 1 Weir. 524; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 188. Entry into a verandah may not amount to house trespass, but such entry coupled with an attempt to push open the door does amount to an attempt to commit the offence. 16 Cr. L. J. 2=26 Ind. Cas. 306. Considering the mode of life among the common people of this country, it is straining the language of s. 441 to hold that a man entering the compound of an uninhabited house merely to commit nuisance, intends to annoy the owner and that he is guilty under s. 448 of the Penal Code. A. W. N. 1812, 324. A judgment creditor commits an offence under this section if he enters into other house than that mentioned in the warrant of attachment issued by a Civil Court. 2 O. C. 65. The accused caused the roof of his house belonging to him, which the complainant, occupied as his tenant, to be removed while the complainant's wife, a pardanashin woman was in it, and without giving any notice beforehand. The woman had to leave the house to be out of the way of the fragments of the roof falling upon her, and was thus exposed to public view. Held, that an offence under this section has been committed. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. 1. 350. Where in execution of a decree of Court, certain property was attached and taken out of the house in which it was, the decree holder would not be guilty of criminal trespass in doing the act. 15 A. A school was built by public subscription and put in charge of a teacher. He went away having locked the building. The accused who were some of the managers of the school took possession of the building and started certain classes in it. They were convicted of criminal trespass. Held, that this conviction was improper as the building was not in the possession of the complainant and the accused had no intention of annoying him. 17 A. L. J. 334=51 I. C. 350=20 Cr. L. J. 463; see also 52 Ind. Cas. 274. During the temporary absence of the complainant, the accused who wanted to get possession of the house as mortgagee, put a lock on the house. Held that he was not guilty of criminal trespass and that the matter was one for the Civil Courts to deal with. 50 Ind. Cas. 834=20 Cr. L. J. 354.

Where the accused were proved to have gone to a house with Civil Court officers and entered the same in order to execute a Civil Court decree which they had obtained against one of the inmates of the house, held that they were not liable to be convicted for criminal trespass. 34 C. W. N. 583=127 Ind. Cas. 551=31 Cr. L. J. 1223=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 720.

Where a person enters a house with intention of carrying out his amours with married woman, owner has right to arrest him or to pursue him for arrest and to use all means for effecting it. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 83.

For an offence under s. 448 intention is one of the most important ingredients and in order to determine the intent it is not necessary to consider the circumstances under which the act was done by the accused as also the bona fide nature or otherwise of the claim which the accused may have in respect of the property itself. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 263.

An entry to a house in assertion of a bona fide claim of right cannot constitute criminal trespass, which requires an intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession. 1925 Pat. 167=81 Ind. Cas. 823=25 Cr. L. J. 1047; 88 Ind. Cas. 725=26 Cr. L. J. 1205=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 505.

449. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with death, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

House-trespass in order to commit offence punishable with death.

Sections 449-460.—These sections deal with the offence of criminal trespass when it is aggravated by the end for which it is committed. Hence trespass may be committed for no other purpose than the purpose of playing some idle trick on the inmates of a dwelling, or it may be committed in order to the perpetration of murder or other atrocious crime. These sections regard the ulterior offence which the house-trespasser has in view and visit his crime with a proportionate punishment.—Morgan and Macpherson, 404.

In order to the committing.—The intention and design is the commission of an offence. To bring the offender within these severe penal provisions, it is not necessary that he should do any further act than the house-trespass towards the commission of the "offence punishable with death." But to justify a conviction there should be clear proof of the design to commit a murder or other like offences. In the absence of proof of some further act done, in addition to the criminal trespass, in the prosecution of the murderous intention it can rarely happen that the evidence will suffice for a conviction under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson, 405.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

450. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with transportation for life shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

451. Whoever commits house-trespass in order to the committing of any offence punishable with imprisonment shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if the offence intended to be committed is theft, the term of the imprisonment may be extended to seven years.

House-trespass in order to commit offence punishable with imprisonment.

Scope.—If the entry in a house is made with the consent of the owner and possessor of the house, no offence under this section can be deemed to have been committed. 15 Cr. L. J. 351. Where the accused was found in the complainant's house at night, having gone there with the intention of visiting the complainant's daughter-in-law, a woman of loose character, and probably with her connivance, held that he was not guilty of an offence under s. 456. See also 19 A. 74; 20 Ind. Cas. 622; 1 Weir. 534. In order to constitute an offence under this section all the facts necessary to constitute the offence of simple house-trespass must first be established and it must be further shown that the house-trespass was committed for the purpose mentioned in this section. 41 A. 587; 1 Weir. 535; 1 Weir. 537; 1 Weir. 533; 10 Cr. To constitute an offence under s. 451 an offence under s. 448 must be proved first. The offence contemplated must be found. 20 Cr. L. J. 347=17 A. L. J. 800=50 Ind. Cas. 827. "Offence" means any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. A. L. R. 1931 Lah. 405=1931 Cr. C. 645=32 Cr. L. J. 732=131 Ind. Cas. 381. Where the accused was proved to have stepped into an open court-yard in front of a house and it appeared that some thorny bushes were placed round the court-yard more to indicate its extent rather than to prevent entry. Held that the place was not a building, and that consequently a conviction under s. 452 I. P. Code was not sustainable. 26 A. L. J. 855=110 Ind. Cas. 798=29 Cr. L. J. 766. A man who enters the house of another at night with intent to commit adultery with his wife is guilty of an offence under s. 451, and if in such a case it is shown that the husband was at the time of the occurrence absent from the house in the legitimate pursuit of his occupation, it may safely be presumed that he neither consented to nor connived at any adultery or immorality on the part of his wife. 89 Ind. Cas. 319=26 Cr. L. J. 1343=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 635.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable with Court's permission—Triable by any Magistrate, if the intended offence is theft—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

452. Whoever commits house trespass, having made preparation for causing hurt to any person or for assaulting any person, or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt, or of assault or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Collection of lathies and brickbats on the property unlawfully entered is sufficient proof of threatening behaviour. 1928 Pat. 124. Criminal trespass were committed with object of interfering with religion is not to be lightly treated. A. I. R. 1935 All. 647.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

453. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Cumulative sentence under ss. 453 and 379 is illegal. 6 W. R. Cr. 62. Mere trespass by night is not enough. But active step taken by the accused to conceal himself must be proved to sustain a conviction for lurking house trespass. 21 P. R. 1916 Cr.=44 P. W. R. 1916 Cr.=17 Cr. L. J. 304=123 P. L. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

454. Whoever commits lurking, house-trespass or house breaking, in order to the committing of any offence punishable with imprisonment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if the offence intended to be committed is theft, the term of the imprisonment may be extended to ten years.

Notes.—Any such trespass, in order to the committing of any offence punishable with death or with transportation for life is punishable by sections, 448, 459—Morgan and Macpherson; see also 8 M. H. C. R. App. 6; see for cases 100 Ind. Cas. 120=28 Cr. L. J. 248=1927 Mad. 343; 10 A. 146.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

455. Whoever commits lurking, house trespass, or house-breaking, having made preparation for causing hurt to any person, or for assaulting any person, or for wrongfully restraining any person, or for putting any person in fear of hurt, or of assault, or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The offence of house-breaking is complete when entry into the house is effected. 28 Cr. L. J. 554=102 Ind. Cas. 490=1927 All. 536.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

456. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Intention.—In a prosecution for lurking house-trespass by night under this section, the burden of proving what his intent was lies upon the accused. 29A. 49; 42 P. R. 1881. The presence of an accused in house at night shows his guilty intention and it is for him to rebut the presumption. 13 A. L. J. 625; 16 A. L. J. 153. See also, 14 P. R. 1883 Cr.; 2 M. 30; 50 P. L. The accused opened the door of a room and peeped in, his intention being to force an illicit intrigue on one of the women sleeping in the room. Held, he was guilty under s. 456 I. P. Code. 6 Pat. L. T. 588=26 Cr. L. J. 954=87 Ind. Cas. 106=A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 713.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

457. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night in order to the committing of any offence punishable with imprisonment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if the offence intended to be committed is theft, the term of the imprisonment may be extended to fourteen years.

Adultery.—Where it was proved to the satisfaction of the court that the accused entered the complainant's house in order to have sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife, and it was further proved that he did so without the complainant's consent, held that he was properly convicted under this section. 22 A. 82 see also 2 Weir. 235 ; U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 335 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 689.

Scope.—To sustain a conviction under this section it is necessary that the court should be in a position to say which specific offence the accused intended to commit. 1 Weir 533. Where the accused broke open into a house during the owner's absence, assaulted his servants and took forcible possessions of it with the object of establishing their title to the house. Held, that the accused must be deemed to have intended that their act was likely to annoy the complainant and that they were rightly convicted under s. 457 Penal Code. 9 Ind. Accused was charged with having committed lurking house trespass by night by entering into the cattle enclosure of the complainant with the intent to commit theft of his cattle and he was convicted for the same under s. 457 I. P. Code. 24 P. R. 1914 Cr. When the charge is that the accused committed an offence under s. 457 I. P. Code, with a view to commit an offence under s. 497 I. P. Code, it is only fair to him that the offence with which he is charged should be fairly stated, in order that he may meet it. 32 P. L. R. 1902=31 P. R. 1901 Cr. The accused was convicted of house-breaking by night and of house-trespass in respect of the same acts : Held that the second head of the charge was superfluous, in as much as it involved the same intention substantively as the first, which intention ought not to be applied to support two different charges. Rat. Un. Cr. 302=Cr. Rg. 50 of 1886. An entry into a compound with intent to commit theft is punishable only as trespass and attempt to commit house-breaking with the intent above-mentioned. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 484. An offence under this section is ordinarily more serious than one under s. 380 and it is expedient that a person who commits an offence under the former should be correctly convicted and adequately punished. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I. 273. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 23. A conviction under s. 457 cannot be had when it is proved the accused had on his body valuable properties of his own, and the entrance of the house remained closed and unbroken, and he sets up a story that he went to house to negotiate marriage and the same is corroborated by an inmate of the house. 26 Cr. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

458. Whoever commits lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking

Lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night after preparation for hurt, assault or wrongful restraint. by night, having made preparation for causing hurt to any person, or for assaulting any person, or for wrongfully restraining any person or for putting any person in fear of hurt, or of assault, or of wrongful restraint, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to fourteen years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section only applies to the house-breaker who actually has himself made preparation for causing hurt to any person or for assaulting any person or for wrongfully restraining any person and so on, and not to his companions as well who themselves have not made such preparation. 1923 Lah. 509.

Cases.—6 Lah. L. L. J. 622.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

459. Whoever, whilst committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking causes grievous hurt to any person, Grievous hurt caused whilst committing lurking house-trespass or house-breaking. or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section provides for a compound offence the governing incident of which is that either "lurking house-trespass or "house-breaking" must have been completed, in order to make the person who commits that offence either by causing grievous hurt or attempt to cause death or grievous hurt, responsible under this section. In other words, the causing of the grievous hurt or the attempt to cause death or grievous hurt, must be done in the course of the commission of the offence of lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, and at the time when it is being committed. 8 A. 649. See also 13 C. P. L. R. 125. The offence of house-breaking is complete when entry into the house is effected and any grievous hurt subsequently caused by the persons breaking into a house cannot be said to be grievous hurt caused while they were committing the house-breaking. 25 A. case of actual use of lathies in trying to escape after burglary. 11 L. L. J. 230=30 P. L. R. 125=30 Cr. L. J. 838=117 Ind. Cas. 802.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

460. If, at the time of the committing of lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, any person guilty of such offence shall voluntarily cause or attempt to cause death or grievous hurt to any person, every person jointly concerned in committing such lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section is intended to provide for the punishment of persons who were jointly concerned in the committing of the house-trespass or house-breaking altogether irrespective whether they were the persons who caused or attempted to cause grievous hurt. 8 A. L. J. 575. The expression 'at the time of committing house-breaking by night' must be limited to the time during which the criminal trespass continues which forms an element in the house-trespass, which is itself essential to house-breaking and cannot be extended so as to include any prior or subsequent time. 2 P. R. 1862 Cr.; see also 38 Ind. Cas. 997. The section must be limited in its application to offences committed at the time during which the criminal trespass continues which forms an element in house-trespass which is itself essential to house-breaking and cannot be extended so as to include any prior or subsequent time. 2 Lah. 342=23 Cr. L. J. 164=65 Ind. Cas. 628. The provisions of the section must be construed strictly and it is not contemplated that where the principal action done by accused persons amounts to no more than a mere attempt to commit the offences of lurking house-trespass or house breaking the section should be applicable. 8 A. 649=A. W. N. 1896, 253. See also A. I. R. 1924 All. 1032=1934 Cr. C. 1339=1934 A. L. J. 1160.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

461. Whoever dishonestly, or with intent to commit mischief breaks open or unfastens, any closed receptacle, which contains or which he believes to contain property shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—This section and the next section, though ranged under the head of criminal trespass and perhaps within the scope of the definition of that offence, seem to punish a certain form of attempt to commit theft or mischief through criminal trespass on a closed receptacle. "Case, package, or receptacle," are mentioned in s. 480, relating to the offence of using a false trade-mark. The "receptacle" may include not only a room, a part of a room, or closet, etc., but a box or closed packing—Morgan and Macpherson. 408.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

462. Whoever, being entrusted with any closed receptacle which contains, or which he believes to contain, property, without having authority to open to the same, dishonestly, or with intent to commit mischief, breaks open or unfastens that receptacle, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO DOCUMENTS AND TO TRADE OR PROPERTY MARKS.

463. Whoever makes any false document or part of a document, with intent to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person, or to support any claim or title, or to cause any person to part with property, or to enter into any express or implied contract, or with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed, commits forgery.

Forgery.—The offence of forgery is committed when, by a counterfeit, a document is falsely made to represent some other supposed genuine document for a purpose of deception. The relation which this offence bears to the general system of penal law may be thus stated. In most affairs of importance the intentions, assurances or directions of men are notified and authenticated by means of written instruments. Upon the authenticity of such instruments, the security of many civil rights, especially the right of property, frequently depends; it is therefore of the highest importance to society to exclude the numerous frauds and injuries which may obviously be perpetrated by procuring a false and counterfeit written instrument to be taken and acted on as genuine. In reference to frauds of this description, it is by no means essential that punishment should be confined to cases of actually accomplished fraud. The very act of falsely making and constructing such an instrument with an intention to defraud or deceive is sufficient according to the acknowledged principles of criminal jurisprudence to constitute a crime. The false making is in itself part of the endeavour to defraud, and the existence of criminal intent is clearly manifested by an act done in furtherance and in part execution of that intention.

An instrument which is false or untrue only because the facts which it states are false and untrue, differs from a forged document. Where the instrument is forged, as when a certificate purporting to be signed by a public servant was not in truth signed by him, a person to whom it is shown is deceived, because he is induced to suppose that the fact certified is accredited by the public servant whose certificate it purports to be; and he is deceived in that respect, whether the fact certified is true or false. If on the other hand, such a certificate is in truth signed by the public servant whose name it bears, the document is not forged, although the fact certified is falsely certified; for here the person receiving the certificate is deceived, not by being falsely induced to believe that the public servant had accredited the document by his signature, but by the officer having falsely certified the fact. The document may therefore be forged, although the fact which it authenticates is true. And the document may be genuine, although the fact stated in it is false. Where money or other property is obtained dishonestly by a document of the latter description, that is, where it is false merely as containing a false statement, or representation, the offence of cheating, but not of forgery, is committed.

When a document, whether it is a forged document, or a genuine document, containing false statements, is fabricated in order that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant, and with the intention to mislead the Judge or public servant, the offence defined by section 192 of fabricating false evidence is committed.—Morgan and Macpherson, 410.

Making part of a document.—The "making of a part of a document" must be making part of a false document. Not only the intention but also the falsity of the document should be proved. A. I. R. 1929 All. 396=1929 A. L. J. 592=30 Cr. L. J. 408=115 Ind. Cas. 135.

What constitutes forgery.—To constitute a forgery, the false document must be made "with intent to cause damage or injury to the public" or to any class of the public or to any community. Forgeries of public securities, of the records of courts of justice, of registers kept by public servants, of documents certifying that a person has the requisite medical skill and fitness to act as a master mariner, or has competent medical skill, etc., or of such documents as are mentioned in illustration (j) and (k) of the following section, seem to come within these words. A beat constable whose writes in his note book the signature of a headman, whose village he has not visited, does not commit thereby the offence of forgery. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 356. The term "forgery" is used as a general term in s. 463, Indian Penal Code, and that section is referred to in a comprehensive sense in s. 195 of the Cr. P. Code. A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 485=1 Luck. 523=3 O. W. N. 614=27 Cr. L. J. 969=96 Ind. Cas. 521; see also A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 266=5 Lah. 550=26 Cr. L. J. 537=85 Ind. Cas. 377.

"Or to any person".—Besides such documents as tend to a public damage or injury, every false document, by whatever name it is called, which is intended to cause damage or injury to an individual is included.

Intent to defraud.—The expression "intent to defraud" implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words "defraud" involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived that is infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property. 42 C. L. J. 215=90 Ind. Cas. 534=26 Cr. L. J. 1574. In order to constitute in point of law an intent to defraud, there must be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the forgery, or there must be a possibility of some person being not only deceived but injured by the forgery. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 271=1930 Cr. C. 458. The term "fraud" as used in the Penal Code, is used in its ordinary and popular acceptation. Hence a man, who deliberately makes a false document with false signatures, in order to shield and conceal an already perpetrated fraud is himself acting with intent to commit fraud. 15 Bom. L. R. 708=14 Cr. L. J. 518=20 Ind. Cas. 998. Giving a false name and address in a certificate of the purchase at the time of purchasing firearms is an offence under this section. 20 C. W. N. 326=43 C. 421=32 Ind. Cas. 661=17 Cr. L. J. 69. In order to constitute forgery the document need not be intended to support a false claim or a false title. If, in order to support a true claim or a genuine title a false document is created, it is forgery. 96 Ind. Cas. 850=27 Cr. L. J. 994=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1078. In forgery the intent to defraud is essential. A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 224. If a man intends to gain an unfair advantage by deceitful means and uses a false document, for that purpose his conduct is fraudulent. 27 Cr. L. J. 994. Mere antedating a document is not forgery unless there is dishonesty or fraud on the part of the alleged forger. 98 Ind. Cas. 111=27 Cr. L. J. 1263=8 Pat. L. T. 104. An intent to commit fraud involves an intent to cause injury. It involves something more than mere deceiving. Where process-server forged names on the notices with a view to save himself from the consequences of his neglect of duty or to save himself trouble: Held that it did not amount to intent to commit fraud. A. I. R. 1935 Rang. 203.

"Or to support any claim or title."—Even if a man has a legal claim or title to property, he will be guilty of forgery, if he counterfeits documents in order to support it. Any false document purporting to create, extend, transfer, or otherwise to support, a right or alleged right is included.

"Or to cause any person to part with property."—As orders or requests for the payment of money or delivery of goods, etc.

"Or to enter into any express or implied contract."—As when a man is induced to employ another in a certain capacity by forged documents respecting his qualifications.—Morgan and Macpherson, see also 21 A. 113.

Claim.—The term "claim" is not limited in its application to a claim to property only. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 152=10 Lah. 545=30 Cr. L. J. 900=30 P. L. R. 724=118 Ind. Cas. 385.

Illustrative cases.—The mere fact that the person forged signature of another person, in a plaint, to enable him to file the plaint in time to save case being barred by limitation will not make the act of the person fraudulent. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 271=1930 Cr. C. 358. An entry of excess payment in a muster roll would not make the muster roll a forged document. A false certificate of not very great importance is not a forgery as it is not made on affidavit. 27 A. L. J. 591=115 Ind. Cas. 135=30 Cr. L. J. 408. Creation of false document for supporting even a true or genuine title is forgery. 96 Ind. Cas. 850=27 Cr. L. J. 994. Using false document for giving unfair advantage is fraudulent within s. 25. 96 Ind. Cas. 850=27 Cr. L. J. 994=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1072. A false copy of a forged document by an authorised maker is a false document. But if he has no such authority then he does not commit the offence of making the false copy. 20 Cr. L. J. 142=4 Pat. L. J. 16=49 Ind. Cas. 174. Where a Sub-Inspector keeps persons under surveillance to extort confusion and alters diary to save himself from the consequence of his act offence does not amount to forgery. 34 Bom. L. R. 1090=A. I. R. 1932 Bar. 545. In the above case Baker J. said: "The alteration could not be held to have been made either dishonestly or fraudulently. As dishonesty involves wrongful gain or wrongful loss, obviously it does not apply to the present case when no pecuniary question arises. The element of fraud is also absent. There is no question in the present case of any loss being caused to the Deputy Superintendent of Police who was inquiring into the case by the fact of this diary being altered and pages substituted for the original. It would be a straining of language to say that because he was thereby likely to be led to come to a wrong conclusion as to the guilt of the Sub-Inspector or that there was a probability that the proceedings against him might not result in his conviction, this would therefore render the alteration of the document fraudulent within the meaning, of the Penal Code." In the same case Broomfield J. said : "The element of injury or risk of injury to an individual or to the public is an essential ingredient in the definition of forgery." Imitation closely copied from disputed writing cannot be proper standard of comparison. 144 Ind. Cas. 301=1933 Cr. C. 542=34 P. L. R. 694=34 Cr. L. J. 714=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 608. Maker of even part of document can be guilty of forgery. 142 Ind. Cas. 74=26 S. L. R. 105=1933 Cr. C. 166=A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 37. Forgery is offence of too grave public importance to make it triable merely by subordinate Magistrates. 136 Ind. Cas. 780=35 M. L. W. 267=33 Cr. L. J. 362=A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 216. In forgery cases, circumstantial evidence of fraud must not fall short of proof. 144 Ind. Cas. 301=1933 Cr. C. 542=34 P. L. R. 694=34 Cr. L. J. 714=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 308. Comparison of handwriting is valuable aid. A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 481=34 C. L. J. 828=1933 Cr. C. 1010=144 Ind. Cas. 872.

Essentials of the offence.—The definition of the offence of forgery declares the offence to be completed when a false document or false part of a document is made with specified intent. The questions are "(1) Is the document false? (2) Was it made by the accused? (3) Was it made with the intent to defraud?" If all these questions are answered in the affirmative, the accused is guilty. 1 Weir. 548; 10 C. L. R. 181. The falsity as well as the fact that it was forged within one of the intents mentioned in s. 463 has to be proved. 19 Cr. L. J. 344=1918 Pat. 36.

Claim.—The word "claim" is not limited to a claim to property. A written certificate is "property" within the meaning of this section. 15 A. 210=A. W. N. 1893, 96; see also 25 C. 512; 30 Cr. L. J. 900.

Forgery committed for the purpose of defending one-self.—The fabrication of a false document, or the use of such document by an accused person for the sole purpose of defending himself, does not fall within the range of the sections dealing with forgery. 25 A. 31.

464. A person is said to make a false document—
Making a false document.

First.—Who dishonestly or fraudulently makes, signs, seals or executes a document, or part of a document, or makes any mark denoting the execution of a document, with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made signed, sealed or executed by, or by the authority of a person by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed, or executed, or at a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed, or executed: or

Secondly—Who, without lawful authority, dishonestly or fraudulently by cancellation or otherwise, alters a document in any material part thereof, after it has been made or executed either by himself or by any other person, whether such person be living or dead at the time of such alteration; or

Thirdly—Who dishonestly or fraudulently causes any person to sign, seal, execute, or alter a document, knowing that such person, by reason of unsoundness of mind or intoxication cannot, or that by reason of deception practised upon him, he does not know the contents of the document or the nature of the alteration.

Illustrations.

(a) A has a letter of credit upon B. for Rs. 10,000 written by Z. A, in order to defraud B, adds a cipher to the 1,00,000 and makes the sum 10,000, intending that it may be believed by B that Z so wrote the letter. A has committed forgery.

(b) A, without, Z's authority, affixes Z's seal to a document purporting to be a conveyance of an estate from Z to A, with the intention of selling the estate to B, and thereby of obtaining from B the purchase-money. A has committed forgery.

(c) A picks up a cheque on a banker signed by B, payable to bearer, but without any sum having been inserted in the cheque. A fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of ten thousand rupees. A commits forgery.

(d) A leaves with B, his agent, a cheque on a banker, signed by A, without inserting the sum payable, and authorises B to fill up the cheque by inserting a sum not exceeding ten thousand rupees for the purpose of making certain payments. B fraudulently fills up the cheque by inserting the sum of twenty thousand rupees. B commits forgery.

(e) A draws a bill of exchange on himself in the name of B without B's authority, intending to discount it as a genuine bill with a banker and intending to take up the bill on its maturity. Here, as A draws the bill with intent to deceive the banker by leading him to suppose that he had the security of B, and thereby to discount the bill, A is guilty of forgery.

(f) Z's will contains these words; "I direct that all my remaining property be equally divided between A, B, and C." A dishonestly scratches out name, intending that it may be believed that the whole was left to himself and C, A has committed forgery.

(g) A endorses a Government promissory note, and makes it payable to Z or his order, by writing on the bill the words, "Pay to Z or his order," and signing the endorsement. B dishonestly erases the words "Pay to Z or his order," and thereby converts the special endorsement into a blank endorsement. B commits forgery.

(h) A sells and conveys an estate to Z. A, afterwards in order to defraud Z of his estate, executes a conveyance of the same estate to B, dated six months earlier than the date of the conveyance to Z intending it to be believed that he had conveyed the estate to B before he conveyed it to Z. A has committed forgery.

(i) Z dictates his will to A. A intentionally writes down a different legatee from the legatee named by Z, and by representing to Z that he has prepared the will according to his instructions, induces Z to sign the will. A has committed forgery.

(j) A writes a letter and signs it with B's name without B's authority, certifying that A is a man of good character and in distressed circumstances from unforeseen misfortune, intending by means of such letter to obtain alms from Z and other persons. Here, as A made a false document in order to induce Z to part with property, A has committed forgery.

(k) A without B's authority, writes a letter, and signs it in B's name, certifying to A's character, intending thereby to obtain employment under Z. A has committed forgery, inasmuch as he intended to deceive Z by the forged certificate, and thereby to induce Z to enter into an expressed or implied contract for service.

Explanation 1.—A man's signature of his own name may amount to forgery.

Illustrations.

(a) A signs his own name to a bill of exchange, intending that it may be believed that the bill was drawn by another person of the same name. A has committed forgery.

(b) A writes the word "accepted" on a piece of paper, and signs it with Z's name, in order that B may afterwards write on the paper a bill of exchange drawn by B upon Z, and negotiate the bill as though it had been accepted by Z. A is guilty of forgery; and if B, knowing the fact, draws the bill upon the paper pursuant to A's intention, B is also guilty of forgery.

(c) A picks up a bill of exchange payable to the order of a different person of the same name. A endorses the bill in his own name, intending to cause it to be believed that it was endorsed by the person to whose order it was payable. Here A has committed forgery.

(d) A purchases an estate sold under execution of a decree against B. B, after seizure of the estate, in collusion with Z, executes a lease of the estate to Z at a nominal rent and for a long period, and dates the lease six months prior to the seizure, with intent to defraud A, and to cause it to be believed that the lease was granted before the seizure. B, though he executes the lease in his own name, commits forgery by antedating it.

(e) A, a trader in anticipation of insolvency, lodges effects with B. for A's benefit, and with intent to defraud his creditors, and in order to give a colour to the transaction, writes a promissory note binding himself to pay to B a sum for value received, and antedates the note, intending that it may be believed to have been made before A was on the point of insolvency. A has committed forgery under the first head of the definition.

Explanation 2.—The making of a false document in the name of a fictitious person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by a real person, or in the name of a deceased person, intending it to be believed that the document was made by the person in his lifetime, may amount to forgery.

Illustration.

A draws a bill of exchange upon a fictitious person, and fraudulently accepts the bill in the name of such fictitious person with intent to negotiate it. A commits forgery.

Fraudulently.—An intent to defraud implies some thing more than mere deceit. The advantage intended to be secured or the harm intended to be caused need not have relation to property or be such as is implied in the term "dishonestly" but it must be something to which the party perpetrating is not entitled either legally or equitably. There can be no intention to defraud where no wrongful result was intended or could have arisen from the act of the accused. 28 Ind. Cas. 102. To constitute a document a false document, it must be shown that it was made with such an intention as is implied in the term fraudulently or dishonestly. A mere intention to deceive is not sufficient. 1 Weir 542. See also 22 B. 768; 28A. 358; 13 M. 27; 6 C. W. N. 382; 2 J. G. 11; L. B. R. (1894-1900), 437; 25 C. 512; 22 C. 313; 13 B. 515 N; 9 W. R. Making a false document.—A person makes a false document who dishonestly or fraudulently signs document with the intention of causing it to be believed that the document was signed by a person by whom he knows it was not signed. 7 Ind. Cas. 176. The "making" of a document or part of a document, does not mean "writing" or "printing" it, but signing or otherwise executing it. The falsity (of a false document) consists in the document, or part of a document, being signed or sealed with the name or seal of a person, who did not in fact sign or seal it. 8 C. L. R. 572. Such a document must be dishonestly or fraudulently made, signed, sealed or executed by the person who is charged and it must be made with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made, signed, sealed and executed by or by the authority of a person, by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made, signed sealed or executed. 17 C. W. N. 354. Makes means "creates" or "brings into existence". A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 681. Where some only of intended executant signs a deed, yet the document is made; 19 Cr. L. J. 177=41 M. 589=43 Ind. Cas. 593. The "making of a part of a document must be the making of a part of a false document and in the making of a part of a document not only the intention or purpose must be proved but the fact that the document was false must be proved. 27 A. L. J. 592=115 Ind. Cas. 135=30 Cr. L. J. 408. Where a Mahomedan executes a Kabinama in favour of his alleged wife with a view to claim her property, he is not guilty of making a false document. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 336=23 Cr. L. J. 723=65 Ind. Cas. 451.

Document.—The word "document" has an extensive meaning assigned to it. The word seems to include everything done by the pen, by engraving, by printing otherwise, whereby it is made on paper, parchment, wood, other substance or representation of words of their equivalents addressed to the eye. Every writing used for the purpose of authentication, if falsely made, is a 'false document',—as in the case of a will by which a testator signifies his intentions as to the disposition of his property,—or of a certificate by which a public servant assures others of the truth of any fact,—or of a warrant by which a Magistrate signifies his authority to arrest an offender. And the words "false document" include not only writings, but also false seals, stamps, and all other visible marks of distinction by which the truth of any fact is authenticated. But where the falsehood consists in a mark of distinction falsely testifying to the quality or genuineness or to the ownership of any article, it seems to be a false trade or property mark and to be properly dealt with under the penal provisions contained in the latter part of this chapter. The most obvious way of making a false document is to write or print, as the case may be, the whole in imitation of a real or imaginary original. But to write a signature is the same in law as to write the entire instrument. And the signature may be made by a mark as well as by writing the letters of a name. It can make no difference whether the whole document is false or whether it is merely false in the material part by which the fraud or deceit is to be effected. If the document is falsified for a dishonest or fraudulent purpose, it is a false document. Morgan and Macpherson, 412.

Or by the authority of a person, etc.—If a man writes another's name by his authority, it is not of course forgery. And if he has no authority in fact, but acting in good faith without fault or carelessness believes himself to be authorised, he does not commit the offence. But if he is authorized to do a certain thing, as to fill up with a certain sum a blank cheque signed by A [see illustration (d),] and he departs from his authority by dishonestly inserting a larger sum, he commits forgery—Morgan and Macpherson, 413. If A signs for B and B is present at the time A must be held to be authorized to do so. A. I. R. 1935 All. 410.

"Or at a time at which he knows that it was not made etc."—As when the document is made to bear a wrong date for some dishonest purpose. These words are to be read distributively and are not governed by the preceding, words "by or by the authority etc." Rat. Un. Cr. C. 772. Elements to be proved in a case of forgery are (i) that the document was not executed on the date on which it purports to have been and (ii) that the parties who executed it did so with fraudulent intent. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 117=6 Rang. 49=29 Cr. L. J. 599=109 Ind. Cas. 679. No forgery is committed by mere ante-dating a document unless it acts or would act prejudicially to another. A. I. J. 573=17 A. L. J. 872=52 Ind. Cas. 61.

Forged document.—Every forged or falsified document is not a forged document. It must satisfy both ss. 464 and 463. An entry in the credit-side which does not impose any liability on the detor, and as such would not cause any damage is not forgery. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 11=3 Lah. 373=25 Cr. L. J. 337=77 Ind. Cas. 225. Kabulyat of a past period prepared subsequently by usufructuary mortgagee to defraud mortgagor as to the amount paid by mortgagors' tenant are forged documents. 26 Cr. L. J. 1115=88 Ind. Cas. 283. It is one thing to hold that because an account book does not appear to have been kept in the regular course of business and does not contain entries that it ought to have contained, therefore, it cannot be acted upon in order to convict a person whose name appears therein as having received money, and it is quite a different thing to hold as a positive fact that that account book is forged. In the absence of any other evidence, no prosecution should be allowed to be launched on the basis that it was forged. 98 Ind. Cas. 56=27 Cr. L. J. 1240=A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 47.

Clause (2). A document which has once existed as a genuine document, may become "false document" by reason of some addition, or omission, or by the obliteration of some material part. Vide illustrations (a), (f) and (g). But a complete cancellation or obliteration of a document, like the destruction of a document is an offence specially made punishable by a latter section (477), and which seems not to fall within this definition.—Morgan and Macpherson, 414.

Clause (3).—A document may be a false document, although it is signed or executed by the person by whom it purports to be signed or executed. This happens, where a person [as in the case given in the illustration (e)] is fraudulently induced to execute a will, or a material alteration is made in the writing without his knowledge; for in such case, although the signature is genuine, the instrument is false because it does not truly indicate the testator's intention, and it is forgery of the person, who fraudulently caused such will to be signed, for he made it to be the false instrument which it really is—Morgan and Macpherson, 415.

Explanation (1).—It is a false document if the offender makes it falsely in the name of any other person, although that name happens also to be the offender's own name. A man who makes a promissory note in his own name without any false description or addition and with an honest intention, if he afterwards uses or attempts to use the note pretending that it is signed by another person of the same name does not by this false representation make the promissory note a "false document." It was genuine document when he signed it and does not become false by his subsequent use of it for the purpose of cheating. In such cases as those mentioned in the illustrations (d) and (e) a man signs or executes a document in his own name which is false in a material part and is calculated to induce another to give credit to it as genuine and authentic where it is false and deceptive. A man who having conveyed land, afterwards for fraudulent purpose executes a document, purporting to be a prior conveyance of the same land intends by this false document to obtain credit by deception, the document purporting to have been made at a time earlier than the true time of execution—Morgan and Macpherson, 416.

Explanation (2)—If a man forges the name of another person, real or fictitious or the name of a deceased person, he makes a false document if the document is made for a fraudulent or dishonest purpose. It is none the less false, because the name used is a mere fiction—Morgan and Macpherson, 416.

Cases.—Entering previous payments on the back of a bill is not forgery. 8 C. W. N. 278. A charge of forgery cannot lie against a person who is not the writer of a document or who does not sign the forged name. 17 C. W. N. 354. The prisoner made certain entries in his ledger, which consisted of rough loose sheets, showing that certain sums of money had been paid to the prosecutor, which in fact, had not been repaid. Held that the prisoner was guilty of forgery. 1 Ind. Jur. N. 46. The alteration of a date in a bond is an alteration in a material part thereof, although the alteration is not made for the purpose of saving limitation. 14 P. R. 1881 Cr ; see also 21 W. R. Cr. 41 ; 23 W. R. Cr. 49 ; 4 L. B. R. 46 ; L. B. R. (1893-1900), 266 ; 13 C. 349 ; 77 Ind. Cas. 423 ; (1918) Pat. 36 ; 41 M. 589 ; 43 Ind. Cas. 828 ; 3 Lah. 373.

False description.—It would be going too far to hold that, whenever the executant of a document attaches a false description to his name, he comes within the purview of this section. But a false description may make a document a forgery when it is found that the accused, by giving such a false description, intended to make out or wanted it to be believed that it was not he that was executing document but a fictitious person. 19 M. L. J. 78.

465. Whoever commits forgery shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Intention.—This section cannot apply except where the dishonest or fraudulent intent embraced in the definition given in s. 464, is made out and such intention is not made out merely by establishing, however clearly that, under conceivable circumstances, a particular error might be used to support some false claim. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 201. In cases under this section the immediate and more probable intention of an accused is that to which the Court must look and not some more remote and less probable intention. A. W. N. 1892, 243 ; see also 16 Cr. L. J. 76. Clear proof is required in a case of forgery. It should be clearly shown upon whom the fraud was committed. U. B. R. (1892-1895) Vol. I, 279. A document false in fact which B concocted to commit fraud completes the offence. 28 M. 90 F. B.

Evidence.—The facts which show that the document is a false document within section 464 must be proved also that the accused made the false document ; and lastly, the guilty intention of the accused to cause damage or injury, or to support a claim, etc. It is not a necessary part of this offence that any damage or injury should be actually suffered or that any fraud should be perpetrated. Nor is a using or uttering the forged document a part of this offence. From the intention that the false document should deceive others into a belief that it is genuine it may generally be inferred that there an intention to damage or injure. It will not avail the offender to show that he meant to pay the promissory note or other forged document when it became due, or even that he actually paid it and it so prevented damage or injury.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Cases.—Where a charge is laid against an accused under s. 465 read with s. 471, Penal Code he cannot be convicted and sentenced under s. 466 read with

466. Whoever forges a document purporting to be a record or proceeding of or in a Court of Justice, or a register of birth, baptism, marriage, or burial, or a register kept by a public servant as such, or a certificate or document purporting to be made by a public servant in his official capacity, or an authority to institute or defend a suit, or to take any proceedings therein, or to confess judgment, or a power of attorney, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Elements of fraud or dishonesty.—The elements of fraud or dishonesty, as explained in the Penal Code, must be present in the mind of the accused to bring his case under this section. 28 C. 434. Alteration of name and age in an education certificate and using it as genuine with a view to obtain the official appointment constitute, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, offences under ss. 466 and 471. 2 L. but to cases where a certificate or other document is forged by some unauthorised person with a view to make it appear that it was duly issued by a public officer. 7 C. L. R. 356.

Cases.—Where the accused, a public servant who had committed criminal breach of trust made false entry in an account book and was convicted of the offence under ss. 409 and 466 of the Indian Penal Code, and it appeared that the entry was not made with intent to defraud—held that the conviction under s. 466 of the Indian Penal Code must be set aside. 8 P. Procedure.—Non-Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

467. Whoever forges a document which purports to be a valuable security or a will, or an authority to adopt a son, or which purports to give authority to any person to make or transfer any valuable security, or to receive the principal interest, or dividends thereon, or to receive or deliver any money, moveable property, or valuable security, or any document purporting to be an acquittance or receipt acknowledging the payment of money, or an acquittance or receipt for the delivery of any moveable property or valuable security, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section punishes the forgery of such documents as are valuable securities (see section 30) and of the other documents here mentioned. Forgery of a hundi is an offence under this section. 31 P. R. 1910; see also 149 Ind. Cas. 936=34 Cr. L. J. 892=14 P. L. T. 580=A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 488=1933 Cr. C. 1030. The writer of a forged receipt is not guilty under this section where there is no evidence that he was present at the execution of the receipt or that he helped any one to make use of it. A. I. R. 1925 Cal.

192. The essence of an offence under this section is deceit and where no body has been deceived or injured by the action, of the accused no offence under this section is made out. 1932 M. Cr. C. 41=1932 M. W. N. 117. The offence of abetment of forgery is plainly quite different from the offence of using as genuine a forged document. There is nothing either in law or in fact to prevent a man being innocent of the first offence and guilty of the second. 55 C. L. J. 336=140 Ind. Cas. 544=A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 545. The mere antedating a document is not forgery, but if it is shown that the antedating had or could have had any operation to the prejudice of any one it will be forgery. 5 Pat. 573=98 Ind. Cas. 252. The forgerer using the forged document can be punished only under s. 467 and not under ss. 467 and 471. A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 440=26 Cr. L. J. 1275=88 Ind. Cas. 1051.

Cases.—Where a person sells a note purporting by an endorsement on it to have been sold to his firm, and it is proved that it was not sold to his firm by the persons named in the endorsement, it must be held that the person sells the note knowing or having reason to believe it to be forged, and is liable to be punished under ss. 467 and 471 of the Penal Code. 15 C. 269. There must be a separate Court for every alleged item of perjury and forgery or, in other words, there must be independent evidence of user in the case of each document. 14 C. L. J. 652=13 Cr. L. S. 195 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code refers to an offence described in s. 463 I. P. Code and the latter is used there in a comprehensive sense so as to embrace all species of forgery and includes a case falling under s. 467 I. P. Code. 5 Lah. 550. An applicant for an appointment appended to his application a forged certificate. Held, his object was to obtain wrongful gain and he was guilty of offences under ss. 467 and 471, I. P. Code. 1925 Rang. 9=76 Ind. Cas. 225=25 Cr. L. J. 126. It is an offence under s. 467 to forge a document, even though there is no intention to use the same. 25 Cr. L. J. 1162=81 Ind. Cas. 986. A person who wrote a forged receipt cannot be convicted under s. 467 I. P. Code, in the absence that he was present at its execution or that he helped any person to use it. 82 Ind. Cas. 261=25 Cr. L. J. 1253. Where the bench clerk of a sub-divisional Magistrate's Court received a sum of money, being the amount of fine levied on the payer, and misappropriated it and with a view to screen the misappropriation made a false report he is guilty of offence under ss. 467 and 471 I. P. Code. 25 Cr. L. J. 1378=83 Ind. Cas. 338=3 Bur. L. J. 113. The offence of forging a document and using it as genuine under ss. 467 and 471 I. P. Code, includes the offence of a public servant framing an incorrect document with intent to cause injury under s. 467 I. P. Code, and on a conviction both under ss. 467, 471 and under s. 167 is not maintainable. A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 615. The bare fact that the stamp on which the document was executed are not supposed to have been issued on the date of the execution of the document is not sufficient for convicting a person under this section. It must be proved that the said stamp paper could not have been issued to the public at that date. 35 P. L. R. 599.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.—When valuable security is a promissory note—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

468. Whoever commits forgery, intending that the document forged shall be used for the purpose of cheating, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Cheating. Where the offence is committed after the offence of cheating is completed, the accused cannot be convicted under this section. 15 P. R. 1876 Cr. The offence under s. 468 is complete as soon as there is a forgery with the particular intent. When the intent is accomplished another distinct offence is committed. A. I. R. 1924 Nag. 120=25 Cr. L. Conviction under this section is bad when the use of the forged document by the accused is not proved. 89 Ind. Cas. 398=26 Cr. L. J. 1358. J who was on friendly terms with S one day called on W, a Railway Superintendent, and asked for a vendor's contract and in support of his request handed to him a closed envelope containing a letter alleged to be written by the Governor of the Punjab. It was proved that as a matter of fact the letter was forged by S at the instigation of J. Held on those facts, that it may be presumed that S wrote the document knowing it will be used to defraud W and on that the Magistrate rightly convicted S of the offence under s. 468 I. P. Code and J of the offences under s. 468 read with s. 109 and ss. 471 and 511 I. P. Code, namely of the offences of abetment of forgery and attempt to cheat. 9 Lah. L. J. 103=101 Ind. Cas. 493=28 Cr. L. J. 461. Where Court-fees stamp was purchased for client but was not used, client's name was altered and stamp was used, offence under s. 468 held not committed. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 337. Forgery though a substantive offence, partakes the nature of an attempt. It is usually an act done in furtherance of some criminal design. If it can be proved that the purpose of the offender in committing the forgery is to obtain property dishonestly, or if his guilty purpose comes within the definition of cheating (section 136) he is punishable under the present section. The intention of the forger may be fairly inferred in most cases from the contents of the forged document.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

469. Whoever commits forgery, intending that the document forged shall harm the reputation of any party, or knowing that it is likely to be used for that purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—A, with the intention of harming B's reputation or knowing that what he does is likely to have this effect writes a letter in imitation of B's handwriting purporting to be addressed to confederate in some disgraceful and dishonest transaction and shows this letter to other persons. He has committed this offence. As to what written statements may be said to harm a person's reputation the chapter (XXI) of defamation should be consulted.—Morgan and Macpherson. For a case under this section. Vide, 10 W. R. Cr. 61 ; 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 12.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

470. A false document made wholly or in part by forgery is designated "a forged document."

471. Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document shall be punished in the same manner as if he had forged such document.

Scope.—The use of forged documents contemplated by this section is such use as causes wrongful gain or wrongful loss. That is to say, the section applies to the case of a person, who appears before some other person, or before a Court, with a document, and endeavours to induce that person or Court to do some act which he or it would not do, if the document was known to be a forgery. 11 C. W. N. 838=5 C. L. J. 454 ; 1 Weir 550. Deprivation of property, actual or intended, is not a necessary ingredient of the pretext to defraud in this section. 5 C. W. N. 897. A copy of a document alleged to be false does not come within the definition of a "false document" and a conviction under section 471, upon such copy, cannot stand. 20 M. L. J. 534 ; but see A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 90=1932 Cr. C. 530=33 Cr. L. J. 452. Where it has been held that production of certified copy of forged document with necessary knowledge and intention is offence under s. 471. The production by a party of a document which he is bound by law to produce can not by itself constitute a user of document by him. 22 M. L. J. 181. The filing of a forged document in a Court with the intention of relying on it at the trial of a case, amounts to an attempt to use such document, though the document itself was not actually used, and the person filing it may be prosecuted for offences under ss. 511 and 471. 13 Ind. Cas. 99. Where a person gave his pleader a copy of a false document for the purpose of using it in the trial of his suit, held, that he was guilty of an offence under this section and not merely an attempt to commit that offence. 26 Cr. 863. See also 19 C. W. N. 125 ; 5 C. L. J. 233 ; 5 C. 717. "There must be a using of the document by a person who knows or has reason to believe that it is forged, and such using must be with the intention to defraud or to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss. In deciding whether there has been a "using as genuine" of the document the Courts will advert to the nature of the document. Some document, such as receipts are intended to remain in the holders' possession, other documents such as cheques or promissory notes must be tendered to the persons who are to pay them. Whatever the document, the dealing with it by the accused person, must be such as to satisfy the Court that he intended to defraud, but it is not necessary that wrongful gain or wrongful loss should actually be caused by the use."—Morgan and Macpherson.

The fact that the primary object of the appellant in using the forged receipt was to get out of the difficulty in which he was put by the criminal case and that he did not support the document by production of perjured evidence may be taken into account in mitigation of punishment. 16 C. W. N. 633.

Cases.—The fact that a person charged with an offence under s. 471, Penal Code is himself, the forger of the document, is no reason why he should not be charged under s. 471, Penal Code, especially when he cannot be charged under s. 467. 13

Cr. L. J. 862=17 Ind. Cas. 798. In order to sustain a conviction under this section for using a forged document as genuine, it is not sufficient to prove that the accused was responsible for its use and should have been aware of its contents. It should also be proved that the accused himself used the document, that is, put in the document. 1 Weir 550; A. W. N. 1887, 195; 25 P. R. 1913 Cr.=14 Cr. L. J. 667. It is extremely doubtful whether the mere filing of a copy of which the original is alleged to be forgery, is user of forged document. 20 C. W. N. 262=43 C. 783=17 Cr. L. J. 130.

A hundi purporting to have been drawn by a firm which never had any existence is a forgery. 30 P. W. R. 1916=17 Cr. L. J. 574=36 Ind. Cas. 154. The production of a document which was a title deed in answer to a citation in which no particular deed was specified is a voluntary production and amounts to user within the meaning of s. 471. 18 Cr. L. J. 839=41 Ind. Cas. 663. Using false attkeshi with forged signature to defraud Court is an offence under this section. 42 M. 558. An accused cannot be convicted under this section, for making change in a document so that it may be taken in evidence, where the change is not material to facts. 17 A. L. J. 872=52 Ind. Cas. 61=20 Cr. L. J. 575. Where pending a police investigation a person tenders a forged document to the investigating officer and thereby causes that officer to do something which he would otherwise not have done, he is guilty of having used a document within s. 471 I. P. Code. 60 Ind. Cas. 674=22 Cr. L. J. 274. Accused obtained a prescription from a medical man for one tube of morphia and altering the words "one tube" to "four tubes" presented the prescription to a chemist and obtained four tubes of morphia from him. Held that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 471 I. P. Code. 63 Ind. Cas. 617=22 Cr. L. J. 681. Where evidence is insufficient to prove that accused actually committed forgery, he may be convicted under s. 471 and not under Penal Code s. 465. A. I. R. 1931 All. 258. Section 471 of the Penal Code is no bar to the imposition of separate sentences on an accused person who is convicted at the same trial of both the offences of forgery and using the forged document as genuine. Section 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code authorises the imposition of such separate sentences. 52 M. 532=29 L. W. 559=119 Ind. Cas. 63=30 Cr. L. J. 983=A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 450=56 M. L. J. 554. In order to qualify for appearance at a certain competitive examination C attached a copy of a certificate certified as a true copy of original along with his application. On being asked to produce the original C produced it. The date of birth in the original certificate was changed from 5th January 1901 to 15th January 1904, so as not to debar him from appearing in the above competitive examination. Held, that the original document was a forged one inasmuch as the original date in it was altered and that C knew that it was a false document; that it was made with intent to cause damage and injury to other candidates for the examination and to support C's claim to appear. 10 Lah. 545=30 P. L. R. 724=118 Ind. Cas. 385=30 Cr. L. J. 900. An offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code, has no relation to the Registration Act and is governed entirely by different principles. Where therefore a prosecution was ordered both under s. 82 of the Registration Act under s. 471 I. P. Code, and the proceedings under the Registration Act are found to be illegal, such illegality in no way affects the validity of the prosecution under the Penal Code. 10 Pat. L. T. 889=119 Ind. Cas. 888=30 Cr. L. J. 1101=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 500. S was convicted under s. 471 for having used a forged document and P for having abetted the same; S was sentenced to 4 years and P to 2½ years rigorous imprisonment. Held, that the sentence was not severe. 49 C. The user of a forged document for the purpose of securing an acquittal is dishonest and the same can form the basis of a conviction under s. 471 I. P. Code. 9 Pat. L. T. 800. Where the accused dishonestly used as genuine a forged document in a suit against an illiterate man. Held that he could be punished under s. 471 with the punishment provided by s. 467 I. P. Code. 109 Ind. Cas. 903=29 Cr. L. J. 631=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 630. Even if a man uses a false document to support a good title, he is guilty of an offence under s. 471 I. P. Code. 1924 Cal. 718=83 Ind. Cas. 504=51 C. 469. Section 471 is only directed against persons other than the forger. 29 Cr. L. J. 1387=89 Ind. Cas. 523=21 N. L. R. 152. Where a person has been convicted for forgery under s. 467 I. P. Code, he can not be convicted under s. 471 for using the forged document as genuine. 88 Ind. Cas. 1051=26 Cr. L. J. 1295=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 440. Whenever a person fraudulently or dishonestly presents a document to another person as being what it purports to be or causes the same to be so presented, knowing or having reason to believe that the said document is a forged document, the document is "used as genuine" within s. 471. It matters not whether the document is presented by the accused himself or by his agent or whether it is produced by the accused of his own motion or pursuant to the order of the Court. 52 C. 881. Although a person who produces documents in obedience to the order of the Court may not be held guilty of using forged documents even if they are found to be forged, the case would be different were the production of the documents in Court not voluntary, but is in pursuance of a conspiracy between the accused, one of them being made the custodian of the documents in order to get over some technical objection. 88 Ind. Cas. 181=26 Cr. L. J. 1093=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 345. A complainant when asked by Court to produce documents in support of his complaint produced certain forged ones. Held, he was guilty of an offence under s. 471 I. P. Procedure.—Non-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Non-Compoundable—Triable by the same Court as that by which the forgery is triable. When the forged document is a G. P. Note—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

472. Whoever makes or counterfeits any seal, plate, or other instrument for making an impression, intending that the same shall be used for the purpose of committing any forgery which would be punishable under section 467 of this Code, or with such intent, has in his possession any such seal, plate, or other instrument knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and also be liable to fine.

Scope.—This section covers only the case of a counterfeit of an existing thing. 81 Ind. Cas. 986.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

473. Whoever makes or counterfeits any seal, plate, or other instrument for making an impression, intending that the same shall be used for the purpose of committing any forgery which would be punishable under any section of this chapter other than section 457, or with such intent has in his possession any such seal, plate, or other instrument, knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine.

Cases.—13 W. R. Cr. 16.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

474. Whoever has in his possession any document, knowing the same to be forged, and intending that the same shall fraudulently or dishonestly be used as genuine, shall, if the document is one of the description mentioned in section 466 of this Code, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and, if the document is one of the description mentioned in section 467, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Gist of the offence.—To support a charge under this section it is necessary for the prosecution to prove (1) that the documents, the subject of the charge, were forged ; (2) that the accused knew them to be forged ; (3) that he was in possession of them ; (4) that he intended that they should be fraudulently or dishonestly used as genuine ; and (5) that each of the documents was of the description mentioned either in s. 466 or in s. 467. 16 B. 165. The guilty intent cannot be suspected or surmised. W. R. 1864 Cr. 12 ; 2 P. R. 1895 Cr. See the case in 6 M. L. T. 466. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

475. Whoever counterfeits upon or in the substance of any material, any device or mark used for the purpose of authenticating any document described in section 467 of this Code, intending that such device or mark, shall be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to any document then forged or thereafter to be forged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession any material, upon, or in the substance of which, any such device, or mark has been counterfeited, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

ged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession any material, upon, or in the substance of which, any such device, or mark has been counterfeited, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—To support a charge under the latter part of the section it is necessary to prove (1) that the accused was in possession of the papers referred to in the charge; (2) that the devices or marks on these papers were counterfeited on them; (3) that the devices or marks were such as are used for the purpose of authenticating any document described in s. 467; (4) that the accused intended that the devices or marks should be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to documents either then forged or thereafter to be forged. 16 B. 165. See Rat. Un. Cr. C. 165; B 15 189.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

476. Whoever counterfeits, upon, or in the substance of, any material, any device, or mark, used for the purpose of authenticating any document other than the documents described in section 467 of this Code, intending that such device or mark, shall be used for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to any document then forged or thereafter to be forged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession any material upon, or in the substance of which any such device or mark has been counterfeited shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

then forged or thereafter to be forged on such material, or who, with such intent, has in his possession any material upon, or in the substance of which any such device or mark has been counterfeited shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Where application for agricultural loans bearing signature of tenants was not signed by him but by the accused but tenant returned the same and received the same, the accused is not guilty under s. 476 as there was no gain or advantage to him nor any injury or loss to the Government. 145 Ind. damage or injury to the public or to any person, cancels, destroys, or defaces, or attempts to cancel, destroy, or deface or secretes or attempts to secrete, any document which is, or purports to be a will, or an authority to adopt a son, or any valuable security, or commits mischief in any respect to such document, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The words "purports to be" in this section make the law of India upon this matter what it has in a long succession of cases, been held to be in England. In order to constitute an offence under this section, it is not necessary that the document must be stamped and receivable in evidence. 1 Weir 552. Where a document purports to be a valuable security under this section, the question whether it is invalid for want of consideration is immaterial. 1 Weir 554 ; 1 Weir 553. To support a prosecution under this section, the proof of the fraudulent secretion of a document is sufficient and it is not necessary to prove the validity of such a document. 97 Ind. Cas. 1054=27 Cr. L. J. 1230. A person may secrete a document not only when its existence is unknown to other persons for preventing its becoming known, but also when its existence is known to others. In the latter case he may secrete it preventing its being produced in Court, mere failure to produce when there was duty to produce is not enough though this is evidence of secretion. Falsely denying the possession of the document is also good evidence. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 184=1931 Cr. C. 248=25 C. W. N. 425=58 C. 1051 (F. B) ; see also 58 C. L. J. 283. Document destroyed must amount to valuable security. Administration order of court is not valuable security. 35 Bom. L. R. 1062=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 494. Where a Post-master received a V. P. letter and handed over the same to the addressee without getting payment on or before 20-10-25 and then altered his accounts so as to make it appear that he only handed it over on 24-10-25. Held, that he was guilty of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts in the absence of proof by him of the dishonest intention. 102 Ind. Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Tribable by court of Session.

477A. Whoever, being a clerk, officer or servant, or employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant, wilfully, and with intent to defraud destroys, alters, mutilates, or falsifies any book, paper, writing, valuable security or account, which belongs to, or is in the possession of, his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or wilfully, and with intent to defraud, makes or abets the making of any false entry in, or omits or alters, or abets the omission or alteration of, any material particular from or in, any such book, paper, writing, valuable security, or account, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation.—It shall be sufficient in any charge under this section to allege a general intent to defraud without naming any particular person intended to be defrauded or specifying any particular sum of money intended to be the subject of the fraud, or any particular day on which the offence was committed.

Legislative changes.—This section has been added by Act III of 1895, s. 4.

Scope.—It is sufficient to satisfy the words of the section, that the person charged under the section is one who undertakes to perform and does perform the duty of a clerk or servant, whether, in fact, he is a clerk or servant, or not, and though he is under no obligation to perform such duties and receives remuneration. By fraud is meant an intention to deceive, whether it be from any expectation of advantage, to the party himself or from ill-will towards the other is immaterial. 1 Weir 554. Where a partner in a firm is appointed as such to manage the business of the firm or to write its accounts, he acts as its servant ; and if he falsifies the account, he is liable under this section. 6 Bom. A criminal case was commenced in the court of first class Magistrate and involved charges against the accused under ss. 408 and 477 A. I. P. Code. At the time the case commenced the charge under s. 477 A. was exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions. Since the amended Cr. P. Code came into force charges under s. 477A, were triable by a Magistrate with first class powers. Held, that the trial by the Magistrate after the amended Code came into force of the charges under ss. 408 and 477 A. I. P. Code was quite legal and proper. The amendment of the law which enables a Magistrate with first class powers to try charges under s. 477 A, I. P. Code is a matter of procedure only and the amending Act applies notwithstanding that the case was commenced before the amending Act came into force. 28 C. W. N. 998=1924 Cal. 983.

An accountant in a Bank, fearing that the bank may fail any day, and being anxious to recover his money deposited as security, obtained securities equal to the amount of his deposit by falsifying the accounts. He thus deceived the higher authorities of the Bank. Held, that as the falsity of the account was made to deceive the Bank authorities in case of liquidation and as together with the intention of deceiving there was an attempt to obtain an undue advantage there was in law an intent to defraud. 23. Of Trade, property, and other Marks.

478. A mark used for denoting that goods are the manufacture or merchandise of a particular person is called and, for the purposes of this Code, the expression "trade mark" includes any trade-mark which is registered in the register of trade-marks kept under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act 1883, and any trade-mark which, either with or without registration, is protected by law in any British possession or foreign State to which the provisions of the one hundred and third section of the Patents, Designs and Trade-marks Act, 1883, are under order in Council for the time being applicable.

Legislative charges.—Ss. 478-489 have been substituted for the original by the Indian Merchandise Marks, Act (IV of 1889) s. 3.

Trade mark.—A distinction mark may be adopted by a person who is not the manufacturer but the importer of goods and he will acquire the property in that mark as indicating that all goods which bear it have been imported by him. 14 A. L. J. 1080=17 Cr. L. J. 535=36 Ind. Cas. 583. Under s. 478 complainant has to prove that the goods which are the subject of the mark are manufactured and sold by himself and that goods are known in the market as being of his manufacture alone. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 235. In India there is no method by which a trade-mark may be registered. But a right may be acquired by user. A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 322=1929 Cr. C. 498; 49 A. 92=24 A. L. J. 975=A. I. R. 1927 All. 81=99 Ind. Cas. 353. Although there is no Trade Mark Act in India a declaration of the description of a trade-mark serves as evidence of genuineness. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 678=129 Ind. Cas. 612. In England where trade mark can be registered, property in the trade mark can be acquired from the date of registration but in India trade mark can be acquired by long user. 66 M. L. J. 440=57 M. 600=39 L. W. 319=A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 211. There being no statutory law in British India as regards trade-mark cases of alleged infringement of trade-marks have to be decided according to the rules of justice equity and good conscience. English law on the subject may be applied not because it is applicable as such in India, but because it embodies rules of justice, equity and good conscience. 4 A. W. R. 1028.

A mark to be a trademark or property mark must be a mark used for denoting that the goods are the manufacture or the merchandise of a particular person. The mark, in itself, does not denote anything of the kind and it is not necessary that it should do so. The mere fact, that a certain firm imported and sold goods with the mark of a firm which had ceased to exist, in the absence of proof of any transfer or assignment of the mark or of the former having succeeded to the business or the good will of the latter, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction for infringement of trade or property mark. 27 C. 776=4 C. W. N. 423. The word "trade" taken in its ordinary acceptance does not include lending money at interest. 22 P. R. Cr. 1903=14 P. L. R. 1903. The get-up does not constitute a trade-mark. 2 L. B. R. 159. In an action for infringement of trade-mark the standard of comparison of the goods is not that of the experts, but it is of the lay public, of the unwary purchaser. 34 C. W. N. 339=51 C. L. There is no protection in this country to a registered trade-mark as such and the owner has to prove by evidence that he has acquired a right thereto in the sense that the trade-mark or the trade-name is associated in the minds of the public with the goods manufactured by him. 38 C. W. N. 265=151 Ind. Cas. 5=A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 600. A dispute relating to the infringement of a trade-mark can be entertained by a criminal court but the criminal court may direct the complainant to establish his rights in civil court. 29 Cr. L. Trademarks Act, 1883.—Stat. 46 and 47 Vct. C. 57.

479. A mark used for denoting that moveable property belongs to a particular person is called a property-mark.

Property-mark.

Property-mark.—A property-mark, is intended to denote ownership over all moveable property belonging to a person whether it is all of one kind or different kinds. So long as the person owns moveable properties his property-mark impressed upon them remains his, though any particular article out of it may, after such impression, pass out of his hands and cease to be his. The function of a property-mark to denote certain ownership is not destroyed because any particular property on which it was impressed has ceased to be of that ownership. 6 Bom. L. R. 513=1 Cr. L. J. 581.

480. Whoever marks any goods, or any case, package, or other receptacle containing goods or uses any case, package or other receptacle with any mark thereon, in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked, or any goods contained in any such receptacle so marked, are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not, is said to use a false trade-mark.

Notes—Merchandise in ss. 478 and 480 of the Penal Code implies goods not only offered for sale but also selected and so to say guaranteed by the proprietor of the trade-mark. 12 S. L. R. 129=50 Ind. Cas. 165=20 Cr. L. J. 277. In order to establish a case under s. 480 the prosecution must prove that the accused marked goods, that he did so in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked were the manufacture or merchandise of some other person and that such goods are not the manufacture or merchandise of such person. It is unnecessary for a prosecution to prove that an accused in such a case had acted with intent to defraud; should the latter, however, prove that he acted without intent to defraud, he is entitled to be acquitted. A. I. R. 1929 R. 322. Where owing to the mistake of the manufacturer the accused in acting good faith sells goods bearing complainant's mark he is not guilty either under s. 480, or s. 482 or s. 486. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 134=4 Rang. 16=27 Cr. L. J. 755=95 Ind. Cas. 275. Not only person who makes the goods but also person who uses any such package with mark is said to use false trade mark if the goods are tried to be passed as goods of certain manufacturer when they are not actually so. A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 94=1932 Cr. C. 534=33 Cr. L. J. 778=26 S. L. R. 241=139 Ind. Cas. 335.

481. Whoever marks any moveable property or goods, or any case, package or other receptacle containing moveable property or goods, or uses any case, package or other receptacle having any mark thereon, in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the property or goods so marked or any property or goods contained in any such receptacle so marked, belong to a person to whom they do not belong, is said to use a false property-mark.

482. Whoever uses any false trade-mark or any false property-mark, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Cases.—The intention of the legislature will be frustrated if it is held, that the owner of a trade-mark can stand by for several years while his trade-mark is being infringed continuously, and then bring a criminal case in respect of some recent instance in which there has been an infringement. 12 Cr. L. J. 246=10 Ind. Cas. 787=4 Bur. L. T. 83. A trade-mark must be some visible concrete device or design affixed to goods, to indicate that they are the manufacture of the person whose property the trade mark is. It may consist of a name impressed in some distinctive way. 17 C. W. N. 227=18 Ind. Cas. 404=14 Cr. L. J. 68=40 C. 281. Where the title page of the alleged piracy and the title page of the complainant's book are so different that no one is likely to have been misled, a conviction under ss. 482, 486 Penal Code cannot be sustained. 7 M. L. T. 309=6 Ind. Cas. 683=11 Cr. L. J. 393. Where the marks on the accused's bars constitute such an imitation as is sufficiently close to deceive an ignorant and unwary purchaser, the accused could be convicted under s. 482 I. P. Code, which covers the case of using a false trade-mark. 8 S. L. R. 199=16 Cr. L. J. 230=27 Ind. Cas. 902. When the accused, who had opened a shop in close proximity to the shop of the complainant, sold rose water in bottles similar to those which contained the rose water sold by the complainant, but on closer examination great differences in the labels were discernable, held that the accused was not guilty under ss. 482 and 486. 11 C. W. N. 887=6 Cr. L. J. 151. A body corporate can be punished under ss. 482 and 486, Penal Code. The word "whoever" in those sections does not refer only to a definite individual or definite individuals and can apply to a corporate body. 15 Cr. L. J. 337=23 Ind. Cas. 689=7 Bur. L. T. 116. Where a manufacturer of buris flagrantly and dishonestly imitated the label and slip of another with the object of causing it to be believed that the goods of one quality in fact belonged to another; held, that he was liable to be convicted under s. 482 I. P. Code. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 360=7 O. W. N. 598. Although a criminal Court has a discretion in cases of bona-fide dispute or long delay to refer the matter to a civil court, it can refuse remedy to an aggrieved person. Ibid. For the purpose of establishing a case of infringement it is not necessary to show that there has been the use of a mark in all respects corresponding with that which another person has acquired an exclusive right to use, but that the resemblance is such as not only to show an intention to deceive but also such as to be likely to make unwary purchasers suppose that they are purchasing the article sold by the party to whom the right to use the trade mark belongs. In other words the standard of the comparison is not that of the expert but of the unwary purchaser. 34 C. W. N. 339=51 C. L. J. 477=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 274. A body corporate such as a firm may be prosecuted for an offence under s. 480 and 482. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 408=A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 322. Test of an infringement is whether a purchaser would be deceived into believing goods of accused as those of the complainant from looking at the get up where no confusion is likely to be caused, either by having both, side by side or by the purchaser having recollection of the get up of the complainant's goods, prosecution under s. 482 is not sustainable especially where that is no evidence of any purchaser having been misled. A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 345=7 Rang. 169=30 Cr. L. J. 882=118 Ind. Cas. 113. There is no registration of trade-mark in India. Right of action is based on deceit. Complainant to prove reputation of his trade-mark. 20 Cr. L. J. 277=12 S. L. R. 129=50 Ind. Cas. 165. Where accused has used a false trade-mark but had no intent to be defrauded, he could not be convicted under s. 482. 19 Cr. L. J. 722=16 A. L. J. 476=46 Ind. Cas. 402.

Under s. 482 an intent to defraud is an ingredient of the offence but when it has been proved that a trade mark is a false trade-mark then it is to be presumed that the accused had that intent unless he rebuts the presumption when only he is entitled to be acquitted. 118 Ind. Cas. 113=30 Cr. L. J. 882=882=A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 345. Even though no case of purchasers having been deceived by the use of false trade-mark is proved this fact standing alone is insufficient to justify the contention that the accused acted without intent to defraud. The state of mind of persons responsible for the introduction of the trade-mark is a most relevant fact which can be established by evidence. In the absence of such evidence, the accused cannot be held to have discharged the onus of proving want of intention which was upon him. A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 322. It is no where laid down by the legislature that under no circumstances could a dispute relating to the infringement of a trade-mark be entertained by a Criminal Court and that it should always be adjudicated upon by a Civil Court. The only thing which can be said is that the Criminal Court may, in view of the peculiar circumstances of a particular case, stay its own hands and direct the complainant to establish his right in Civil Court. 9 Lah. 491=29 P. L. R. 610=29 Cr. J. J. 425=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 186. For a conviction under s. 482 evidence of actual deception is not necessary. It is enough if the Court finds on a comparison of the two trade marks that the accused was likely to deceive. 1925 Cal. 149=81 Ind. Cas. 922=25 Cr. L. J. 1098. In a trade mark case issue of search warrant for searching a house and for production of account books is not proper. 17 Cr. L. J. 543=9 L. B. R. 45=10 Bur. L. T. 216=36 Ind. Cas. 591. Mere imitation is no offence where there is no infringement of patent or copyright and no attempt to pass off goods as being that of others. 1933 Cr. C. 1423=A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 344. S 15 of the Merchandise marks Act, does not prevent prosecution under s. 482 provided infringement is within 3 years. 36 Ind. Cas. 168.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable with Court's permission—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

483. Whoever counterfeits any trade-mark or property-mark used by any other person shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Where in a case of alleged counterfeiting a trade-mark similar to that of the complainant had been moulded in the glass of the bottles on which the name of the hair oil had also been moulded. Held that according to s. 28 it must be presumed that the accused intended to sell that hair oil in those bottles and thereby cause deception. In this case, the onus was on the accused to show that in making these bottles he had no fraudulent intention. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 445. If two labels are not so similar as to deceive ordinary person there can be no conviction under s. 483. 134 Ind. Cas. 477=8 O. W. N. 827=1931 Cr. C. 637=32 Cr. L. J. 1117=A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 277.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—bailable—Compoundable with Court's permission—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

484. Whoever counterfeits any property-mark used by a public servant, or any mark used by a public servant, to denote that any property has been manufactured by a particular person, or at a particular time or place, or that the property is of a particular quality, or has passed through a particular office, or that it is entitled to any exemption, or uses as genuine any such mark knowing the same to be counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

I. P. Code—55

485. Whoever makes or has in his possession any die, plate or other instrument for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade-mark, or property-mark, or has in his possession a trade-mark, or property-mark, for the purpose of denoting that any goods are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not, or that they belong to a person to whom they do not belong, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—A mark to be a trade or property mark must be a mark used for denoting that the goods are the manufacture or the merchandise of a particular person. The mark, in itself, does not denote anything of the kind and it is necessary that it should do so. 27 C. 776=4 C. W. N. 423. Where a trade-mark consists of an impression moulded in the glass of which the bottles are made together with label and the person is found in possession of the mould in question with the intention of counterfeiting that trade mark, although the apparatus for counterfeiting the label which would complete the trade mark has not been found, the person can be convicted under s. 485. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 664=1930 Cr. C. 1104.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

486. Whoever sells, or exposes, or has in his possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture any goods or thing with a counterfeit trade-mark or property-mark affixed to, or impressed upon the same or to or upon any case, package or other receptacle in which such goods are contained, shall unless he proves—

(a) that, having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against this section, he had, at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the mark, and

(b) that, on demand made by, or on behalf of the prosecutor, he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods or things, or

(c) that otherwise he had acted innocently, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Counterfeiting trade mark.—In order to prove that the trade mark is in imitation of another, it is not necessary that there should be a resemblance in every case. It is sufficient if the resemblances are of such a nature as to be calculated to mislead an unwary purchaser. 9 Bom. L. R. 732=6 Cr. L. J. 75. Books are subject of trade and are covered by the word "goods". Therefore a person selling a book with a counterfeit property mark is liable to be convicted under this section. 26 C. 232=3 C. W. N. O. 67. The onus is upon the accused to show that he comes within the exception. 8 C. W. N. 421. Counterfeiting a label falls within this section. 16 Bom. L. R. 78. See also 32 C. 431; A. W. N. 1897, 99; 32 P. R. 1902 Cr. No conviction under this section stands for the use of another firm's bottle innocently and according to common practice. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 873. Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Compoundable—with Court's permission—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of first or second class.

487 Whoever makes any false mark upon any case, package, or other receptacle containing goods, in a manner reasonably calculated to cause any public servant or any other person to believe that such receptacle contains goods, which it does not contain or that it does not contain goods which it does contain, or that the goods contained in such receptacle are of a nature or quality different from the real nature or quality thereof, shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of first or 2nd class.

488. Whoever makes use of any such false mark in any manner prohibited by the last foregoing section shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished as if he had committed an offence against that section.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

489. Whoever removes, destroys, defaces, or adds to any property-mark, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury to any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

Of Currency-notes and Bank-notes.

489A. Whoever counterfeits, or knowingly performs any part of the process of counterfeiting, any currency-note or bank-note, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section and of section 489 B, 489 C and 489 D, the expression "bank-note" means a promissory note or engagement for the payment of money to bearer on demand issued by any person carrying on the business of banking in any part of the world, or issued by or under the authority of any State or Sovereign Power, and intended to be used as equivalent to, or as a substitute for, money.

Legislative changes.—Ss. 489 A to 489D have been added by Act 12 of 1899 s. 2.

Scope.—A conviction under this section cannot stand unless it is proved that the accused were performing the process or part of the process of counterfeiting a note. Where no counterfeiting was done and where there was no part of any process which could have ended in producing a counterfeit worthy of the name and there was no intention of trying to counterfeit, the conviction under this section must be set aside. 38 Ind. Cas. 746. The words "as genuine" govern only the verb "uses" and not any other verb. 7 Lah. 80=27 Cr. L. J. 638=27 P. L. R. 514. The object of the legislature in enacting the section is to stop the circulation of forged note by punishing all persons who knowing or having reason to believe them to be forged do any act which could lead to their circulation. 7 Lah. 80=27 Cr. L. J. 638=94 Ind. Cas. 414. A person who knowingly sells a forged note to another is guilty under section 489B, whether the purchaser knows it to be forged or not. 7 Lah. 80=27 Cr. L. J. 638=44 Ind. Cas. 414. Under s. 489 A of the Indian Penal Code, for the counterfeiting of a currency note both ability and materials of a particular kind are required, and if either of them be absent, then there cannot be an attempt to counterfeit. A. I. R. 1928 All. 754=51A. 470=30 Cr. L. J. 690=1929 A. L. J. 127.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions.

489B. Whoever sells to, or buys or receives from, any other person, or otherwise traffics in, or uses as genuine, any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—To convict a man under this section for using a forged note as genuine, the possession of the note does not necessitate the explaining the fact of his possession but the prosecution must prove that he knew it to be forged when he passed it. 81 Ind. Cas. 551. No guilty knowledge or intention can be inferred from the mere circumstance that the accused was found in possession of a counterfeit currency-note. 145 Ind. Cas. 1013=34 Cr. L. J. 1156=34 P. L. R. 890=1933 Cr. C. 881=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 596. "As genuine" govern only the verb "uses" and not any other verb. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 72=7 Lah. 80=27 Cr. L. J. 638=27 P. L. L. J. 588=116 Ind. Cas. 243. No guilty knowledge or intention can be inferred from the mere circumstance that the accused was found in possession of a counterfeit currency-note. 34 Cr. L. J. 1156=34 P. L. R. 890=1933 Cr. C. 881=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 596.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions.

489C. Whoever has in his possession any forged or counterfeit currency-note or bank-note, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be forged or counterfeit and intending to use the same as genuine or that it may be used as genuine, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—The onus lies on the prosecution to prove circumstances which lead clearly, indubitably and irresistibly to the inference that the accused had the intention to foist the notes on the public. 11 Lah. 555=31 P. L. R. 867=129 Ind. Cas. 494=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 24. The mere possession of forged notes in not an offence under the Penal Code. In order to bring a case within section 489 C it is not only necessary to prove that the accused was in possession of forged notes but it should further be established (a) that at the time of his possession he knew the notes to be forged or had reason to believe them to be so and (b) that he intended to use them as genuine or that they might be used as genuine. 11 Lah. 555=31 P. L. R. 867=129 Ind. Cas. 494=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 74.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions.

489D. Whoever makes, or performs any part of the process of making, or buys or sells or disposes of, or has in his possession, any machinery, instrument, or material for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for forging or counterfeiting any currency-note or bank-note, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—In order to establish a charge under this section what the prosecution, has to prove in the first place, is that the machinery, instrument or material found in the possession of the accused person is such as would be used in the production of a counterfeit note, and if that is proved the next element which is to be proved is that the accused knew or intended that such article would be used for the purpose of counterfeiting currency-notes. 10 M. L. T. 108. Possession of articles sufficient in expert's opinion to be counterfeit, without explanation of the same by the accused raises a presumption of dishonest intention. A. I. R. 1928 All. 759. Under this section it is not necessary to prove that the accused had the ability to produce counterfeit currency notes with materials in his possession. A. I. R. 1928 All. 754 = 51. A. 470 = 30 Cr. L. J. 690 = 1929 A. L. J. 127 = 116 Ind. Cas. 797.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE CRIMINAL BREACH OF CONTRACTS OF SERVICE.

490. [Breach of contract of service during a voyage or journey.—Repealed by Act III of 1925.]

491. Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract to attend on or to supply the wants of any person who, by reason of youth, or of unsoundness of mind, or of a disease or bodily weakness, is helpless or incapable of providing for his own safety, or of supplying his own wants, voluntarily omits so to do, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

Application.—This section does not apply to a person who is engaged only as an ordinary cook to a family and is not bound by a contract to attend on or to supply the wants of any helpless person. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 354 = Cr. Rg. 43 of 1887.

Principle.—“Persons who contract to take care of infants, of the sick, and of the helpless, lay themselves under an obligation of a very peculiar kind, and may, with propriety, be punished if they omit to discharge their duty. The misery and distress which their neglect may cause, is such as the largest pecuniary payment would not repair. They generally come from the lower ranks of life and would be unable to pay anything. We therefore propose to add to this class of contracts the sanction of the penal law”.—Report of the Law Commissioners.

492. [Breach of contract to serve at a distant place to which servant is conveyed at master's expense.—Repealed by Act III of 1925.]

CHAPTER XX.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO MARRIAGE.

493. Every man who by deceit causes any woman who is not lawfully married to him to believe that she is lawfully married to him and to co-habit or have sexual intercourse with him in that belief, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The offence here made punishable is committed when a man, whether married, or unmarried induces a woman to become, as she thinks, his wife, but in reality his concubine. The form of the marriage ceremony depends on the race or religion to which the persons contracting the marriage may belong. When the races are mixed as in India, and religion may be changed or dissembled, this offence may be committed by a person falsely causing a woman to believe that he is of the same race or creed as herself, and thus inducing her to contract a marriage, in reality unlawful, but which according to the law under which she lives, is valid. Suppose a person half English and half Asiatic by blood, calls himself a Mahomedan or a Hindu and by this deception causes a Mahomedan or a Hindu woman to go through the ceremony of marriage in a form which she deems valid and to co-habit with him, he has committed this offence. A man who deceives a woman into the belief that a certain ceremony which he causes to be performed by some accomplice, constitutes a valid marriage and thus induces the woman to co-habit with him, may be punished under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson, 433.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Non-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

494. Whoever, having a husband or wife living, marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Exception.—This section does not extend to any person whose marriage with such husband or wife has been declared void by a Court of competent jurisdiction ;

nor to any person who contracts a marriage during the life of a former husband or wife, if such husband or wife, at the time of the subsequent marriage, shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years, and shall not have been heard of by such person as being alive within that time, provided the person contracting such subsequent marriage shall, before such marriage takes place, inform the person with whom such marriage is contracted of the real state of facts, so far as the same are within his or her knowledge.

Essentials.—Where polygamy is not legal, the charge of bigamy requires to be supported by the following proofs : (1) the first marriage of the accused must be proved ; (2) his second marriage must then be proved ; and (3) it must be shown that his first wife or husband was alive at the time of the second marriage.—Morgan and Macpherson, 434. Amongst the Hindus and Mahomedans in the case of males polygamy is allowed ; hence bigamy is possible only in the case of a woman. In such a case it must be proved that the accused had a husband living ; (2) that she married during the lifetime of the first husband ; and (3) that such second marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband. When the accused belonged to a caste, in which a second marriage is allowed, no such offence is committed. 7 C. L. R. 354. The causing of the publication of the bans of marriage is not an attempt to marry, but only a preparation for such an attempt. 1 A. 316. Under this section no distinction is made between void and invalid marriages. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 844.

Cases.—A native Christian having a Christian wife married a Hindu woman according to Hindu rites, without renouncing his religion. Held that the second marriage of the accused should be treated in law as an adulterous union, and, therefore, void within the terms of s. 494 of the Code, by reason of its having taken place during the life-time of the first wife. 30 M. 550=2 M. L. J. 345=17 M. L. J. 476=6 Cr. L. J. 338. Where the divorce is invalid a wife commits an offence under this section by going through a second marriage. 6 B. 126. A woman who contracts a Pai marriage with another man during the life-time of her first husband and without his consent is punishable under s. 494 of the Code. 12 C. P. L. R. Cr. 19 ; See also 19 Bom. L. R. 56=4 Bom. Cr. Cas. 3. The accused, a Hindu convert to Christianity, married a Christian wife according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. Subsequently he reverted to Hinduism, and during the life-time of her Christian wife, married a Hindu woman in accordance with Hindu rites. Held the offence of bigamy was not committed. 3 M. H. C. App. 7; 1 Weir. 563.

The parties contracting a second marriage will not be held guilty of bigamy if the marriage is solemnised in their infancy and has never consummated by co-habitation. S. C. 16 Oudh. A bonafide belief that the authority of the caste made a second marriage valid, although it was not so according to law, is no defence to a charge under s. 494 I. P. Code, but it may be taken into account in mitigation of punishment. 1 B. 347. Marriage of a Mahomedan man and woman is rendered ipso facto void by the apostacy of the former, though there are certain methods by which the marriage tie may be renewed. 15 C. L. J. 263=16 C. W. N. 451=39 C. 409=14 Ind. Cas. 641. Under s. 198 a husband can institute a complaint under this section as he is the person aggrieved. 7 A. L. J. 10=32 A. 78=5 Ind. Cas. 167=11 Cr. L. J. 51; 13 Cr. L. J. 204=14 Ind. Cas. 204. Cr. Rg. 7 of 1886; 57 Ind. Cas. 459. When the accused is convicted of an offence under s. 498 of the I. P. Code, and it appears that the woman, being not on good terms with her husband, went to accused of her own accord, a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment is too severe. 33 P. L. R. 1910=24 P. R. 1910 Cr.=8 Ind. Cas. 226=11 Cr. L. J. 597. This section requires proof of a second contract of marriage in the lifetime of the husband or wife of the party as the case may be, and of the invalidity of such contract by reason of the husband or wife being alive. 1 Weir 565 (F. B.). The Hindu Law, which recognises the right of a Hindu husband to contract a valid second marriage, notwithstanding the continuance of a former marriage, does not recognise a correlative right on the part of a Hindu wife. In a case under s. 494, the point for determination is whether there was a valid subsisting marriage at the date of the second marriage. 1 Weir 563. Custom of caste authorising dissolution of marriage without husband's consent and second marriage is contrary to law and as such void in law. 2 B. H. C. 117. But a conviction under s. 494, Penal Code, cannot be supported where there is evidence to show that, by the custom of the caste, sagai or nikha marriage was admissible and that the husband has relinquished his wife. 19 C. 627; see also 7 Pat. L. T. 443=96 Ind. Cas. 115. A nikha marriage falls within ss. 494 and 495, I. P. Code. 6 W. R. Cr. 60. The fact that a certain school of Mahomedan lawyers have declared that a woman is competent to marry again, if her husband has been absent for 4 years, will not bring a case under the exception to s. 494 I. P. Code. 27 P. R. 1878 Cr. The jhingara ceremony of marriage does not by custom constitute a valid marriage within the meaning of s. 494 I. P. Code. 25 P. R. 1888 Cr. An apostacy of a Hindu wife does not dissolve marriage union. 32 P. R. 1870 Cr. Where a person, not governed by Muhammadan law, contracts, or otherwise celebrates, a valid marriage, in accordance with a system of law other than Muhammadan law, the marriage and its dissolution will be subject, in British India, to the provisions of that other system of law, and not according to Mahomedan law, notwithstanding that one of the parties to the marriage has after being so married become a convert to Islam. 26 M. L. J. 260; 4 B. 330; 9 M. 466; 18 C. 264; 1 Lah. 440; 30 M. 550; 32 C. 871; 22 Cr. L. J. 1=1 Lah. 440=59 Ind. Cas. 33. Re-marriage by a Christian wife after conversion to Islam is an offence under s. 494, as the conversion does not dissolve the Christian marriage. 20 Cr. L. J. 3=5 P. R. 1919 (Cr.)=48 Ind. Cas. 493. In order to entitle the accused to the benefit of the exception of s. 494 I. P. Code, it is not necessary to prove that the other party to the marriage has been continually absent from, and not been heard of as alive by, the accused for the space of seven years, it being immaterial under such circumstances, whether or not the accused made any inquiries or had reasonable grounds for believing the other party to be dead. 1 P. A Hindn father giving his married daughter, who on account of her youth has not the knowledge and intelligence to commit an offence under s. 494 again in marriage to another in the life-time of her husband, is guilty of the abetment of bigamy although the girl, herself cannot be convicted under s. 494. 6 C. W. N. 343; see also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 876. Consumption is not required to complete a marriage.. 4 P. R. 1874 Cr. A criminal Court is bound to decide the question of marriage when it is essential to the decision of the question whether an offence has been committed or not. 27 P. R. 1878 Cr. Where during the subsistence of a first marriage, a person goes through a form of marriage recognised by law, he is guilty of bigamy, although the second marriage may be void for other reasons than that of his being bigamous. 19 P. R. 1876 Cr. In arriving at a decision as to whether there has been a valid subsisting first marriage the criminal Court is not bound by the fact of the decision of a Civil Court for custody of the wife or by proceeding in execution of that decree. 18 P. R. 1881 Cr. In order to sustain the conviction of a woman under s. 494 it must be proved (1) that the accused has a husband living; (2) that she married during the life-time of the first husband; and (3) that such second marriage is void for reason of its taking place during the life-time of such husband. 17 C. L. R. 354. A Hindu Christian convert relapsing into Hinduism and marrying a Hindu woman cannot be convicted of bigamy on the ground that he has another wife living whom he married while a professing Christian. 3 M. H. C. App. 7. A, in her childhood, was with her parents baptised into the Roman Catholic church, but after her father's death, the family relapsed into Hinduism. A was then married to a Hindu. The husband, after sometime discarded her on the ground of her former baptism, which was not known to him at the time of marriage. She was then re-admitted to the Roman Catholic church by the second accused and was married by him to a Roman Catholic Christian. Held, that the woman was guilty of bigamy under s. s. 494 Penal Code, and the second accused of abetting the same. 10 M. 218=1 Weir. 566. The causing of the publication of the bans of marriage is not an attempt to marry, but only a preparation for such an attempt. 1 A. 316. It cannot be said that the only "person aggrieved" under s. 494 is the person with whom the second ceremony was gone through. The husband is also a "person aggrieved" under s. 198 Cr. Pro. Code, and the Court should, therefore, take cognizance of an offence under s. 494, Penal Code, on a complaint by the husband. 26 C. 336; 7 A. L. J. 10=32 A. 78. The brother of a lunatic whose wife is charged with having committed bigamy is not a person aggrieved by such offence within the meaning of s. 198, Cr. Pro. Code. 10 B. 340; see also 32 A. 78.

A mona Sikh can validly perform his marriage under the Anand rites, and in respect of the same, the offence of bigamy can be committed. 82 Ind. Cas. 277=25 Cr. L. J. 1269. Under the Criminal Procedure Code as amended in 1923 a first class Magistrate can try an offence of bigamy without committing it to the sessions. 25 Cr. L. J. 39=75 Ind. Cas. 727=1925 Oudh. 60. The Ahamadiya faith is within the pale of Mahomedanism and a Mussalman who embraces the Ahamadiya faith does not become an apostate. Where a Mahomedan husband become an Ahamadiya and thereafter the wife treating him as an apostate marries another she is guilty of bigamy. There is no question of mens rea in the case of an offence under s. 494. 71 Ind. Cas. 65=24 Cr. L. J. 17.

Although a marriage brought about by fraud by the mother of a minor girl without the father's knowledge might be declared invalid, it is not a nullity and is binding until is set aside by a competent Court. Consequently unless it is declared invalid, a person marrying the girl again is guilty of bigamy and the father who gives the girl in marriage is guilty of abetment. 2 Lah. 288. Where the first complaint under s. 494 I. P. Code. was dismissed on the ground that the complainant had not proved that the woman was his lawfully wedded wife, held, that he could not lodge a fresh complaint on the same facts. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 544=11 Lah. L. J. 197=1929 Cr. 87. A person who marries a woman, who is re-marrying during the life-time of her husband, cannot be convicted under this section. At the most he could be charged with abetment of the offence only. L. R. 6 A. 209 Cr.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

495. Whoever commits the offence defined in the last preceding section, having concealed from the person with whom the subsequent marriage is contracted, the fact of the former marriage, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Object.—"The act which, in the English law, is designated as bigamy is always, an immoral act. But it may be one of the most serious crimes that can be committed. It may be attended with circumstances which may excuse, though they cannot justify it.

"The married man who, by passing himself off as unmarried, induces a modest woman to become, as she thinks, his wife, but in reality his concubine, and the mother of an illegitimate issue, is guilty of one of the most cruel frauds that can be conceived. Such a man we would punish with exemplary severity.

"But suppose that a person arrives from England and pays attention to one of his country women at Calcutta. She refuses to listen to him on any other terms than those of marriage. He candidly owns that he is already married. She still presses him to go through the ceremony with her. She represents to him that if they live together without being married she shall be an outcast from society, that nobody in India knows that he has a wife, that he may very likely never fall in with his wife again, and that she is really to take the risk. The lover accordingly agrees to go through the forms of marriage. It cannot be disputed that there is an immense difference between these two cases."—Report of the Law Commissioners.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

496 Whoever, dishonestly or with a fraudulent intention goes through the ceremony of being married, knowing that he is not thereby lawfully married, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—"A person, who by deceit, causes a woman to co-habit with him, under the belief that she is his lawful wife is punishable under section 493. Whether there is deceit or not as between the man or woman, if there is a dishonest or fraudulent intention on the part of those or either of those who go through the marriage ceremony knowing the marriage is not a lawful one, the present section is applicable. As in the case of a pretended lawful marriage, to enable the parties to obtain property so settled to come to one of them on marriage or as if a man wishing to obtain money, jewels or other property belonging to a woman, should deceive her into going through an invalid marriage ceremony, in order that he may obtain them. The mere abuse of the formalities of marriage where there is no deceit practised on the woman, and no, "dishonest or fraudulent intention, is not an offence punishable by this Code where the ceremony partakes of a religious character or not."—Morgan and Macpherson, 437. A conviction under this section for falsely undergoing a marriage ceremony must be supported by proof of fraudulent or dishonest intent. The mere act of permitting an illegal marriage to take place in one's house does not constitute the abetment thereof, as the law construes abetment. W. R. 1864 Cr. 13. Section 496 of the Penal Code applies to cases in which a ceremony is gone through which does not constitute, but it is believed by one of the parties to constitute a marriage. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 77. Where the accused are charged with the principal offence under s. 496 and for abetment thereof there must be a complaint under s. 198 Cr. Pro. Code. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 247. Where the parties were Mahomedans and all that was alleged was that the complainant objected to the marriage on account of its being within prohibited degrees and the parties went to another place and got married. Held that an offence under s. 496 was not committed. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 247.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

497. Whoever has sexual intercourse with a person who is and whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of another man, without the consent or connivance of that man, such sexual intercourse not amounting to the offence of rape, is guilty of the offence of adultery, and shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years or with fine, or with both. In such case the wife shall not be punishable as an abettor.

Scope. The offence of rape has been defined by section 375. When the sexual intercourse does not amount to that offence, and when it takes place between a stranger and a woman who is and whom the offender knows or has reason to believe to be, the wife of another man, the offence of adultery is committed. In support of a charge of adultery, there must be proof; (1) that the woman is married; (2) that there was sexual intercourse; (3) that there were the circumstances which tended to show that the accused person at the time knew, or had reason, to believe, that the woman was the wife of another man. If it appears that the intercourse was by consent or connivance of the husband, this offence has not been committed. The character of both husband and wife, and the terms on which they live together, should be regarded. Morgan and Macpherson, 438. Actual fact of marriage must be proved. 17 Bom. L. R. 75. Desertion of the husband by the wife for one year does not ipso facto dissolve the marriage tie. 18 Cr. L. J. 321=38 Ind. Cas. 433. In all prosecution, under this section the marriage must be strictly proved. 4 Bur. L. J. 107=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 328=27 Cr. L. J. 651; A. I. R. 1928 P. 481. In a prosecution under s. 497 or s. 498 it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that there is existence of legal marriage, before conviction can take place. 28 Cr. L. J. 311=100 Ind. Cas. 535=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 140. Section 61 of the Divorce Act does not forbid the Crown to prosecute and punish an alleged adulterer under s. 497 when moved to do so by the injured husband. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 50. In cases of adultery direct fact need not be proved. Fact is to be inferred from circumstances. 1928 Pat. 375. Every intercourse amounts to an offence. A. I. R. 1928 B. 530. To constitute connivance within the meaning of s. 497, Indian Penal Code, the facts established must lead to a direct and necessary inference that adultery would be committed by the person charged. They may not go to prove privity to the actual commission of adultery, but they must show that the husband acquiesced in by wilfully abstaining from taking any steps to prevent that adulterous intercourse which, from what passes before his eyes or within his knowledge he cannot but believe or reasonably think is likely to occur. L. R. 6 A. 209 Cr.

Object.—This section is intended for the protection of husbands who alone can institute prosecution for offences under it. 1 Weir. 569.

Cases.—Where the husband of a woman preferred a complaint of offence under ss. 494 and 498 of the Penal Code, held, that the complaint did not include an offence under s. 497, and that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused for such offence. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 531; A. W. N. 1881, 112. Where after a decree had given an option to the wife to return to her husband or to pay him money, the accused contracted Natrah marriage with the woman, after payment of the money mentioned in the decree, held that the accused could not be convicted for adultery, as it could not be held that the accused and the woman did not believe that the latter was at liberty to remarry. 5 B. H. C. Cr. 17. Where a husband omits to take any steps against the accused for six or seven years, held that the offence under the section has been condoned by the husband and the accused cannot be convicted under the section. 1 C. W. N. 498. Evidence of adultery must be satisfactory in order to convict a person under this section. A. W. N. 1883, 129. Sections 497 and 498 are evidently, intended for the protection of husbands who alone can institute prosecution for offences against him. 1 Weir. 569=2 M. H. C. 331. Where the accused was discharged for want of a proof of marriage, retrial for the examination of the wife cannot be allowed. 11 C. 81. The question of the validity of the marriage is vital to the commission of an offence under Ch. XX of the Penal Code. The proof of a defacto marriage is not sufficient for a conviction under ss. 497, 498, Penal Code. 7 C. W. N. 143. A conviction under s. 498, on a complaint by the husband of an offence under s. 497. I. P. Code, was set aside by the Chief Court. 18 P. R. 1873 Cr. In a prosecution for adultery, the marriage of the complainant with his alleged wife must be strictly proved. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 539; see also 5 A. 233; 5 C. 566=5 C. L. R. 597 (F. B.) It is not necessary to make a marriage complete that there should be co-habitation. 4 P. R. 1874 Cr. In a case of adultery, sexual intercourse must be proved, the sexual intercourse required for adultery being there as identical thing as the sexual intercourse required for rape. The difference lies in the mode of proof; in rape no presumption of sexual intercourse can be made; in adultery, it can be from evidence pointing strongly to an inference of guilt. It is not necessary, therefore, that there should be direct evidence of an act of adultery, nor that the adulterer should know whose wife the woman is, provided he knew she was a married woman. 21 W. R. Cr. 13.

In a criminal case adultery must be proved in the same degree as in a divorce suit. 1 P. R. 1874. Sagai marriages, that is, the custom of marriage of widows, prevails among certain low castes of Behar, and is legal and valid. Persons committing adultery with a sagai wife are punishable. 3 C. L. R. 410. Where a prisoner accused of adultery sets up in defence a natra marriage contracted with the woman with whom he is alleged to have committed adultery, in accordance with the custom of his caste, the question the Court has to determine is whether or not the accused honestly believed at the time of contracting the natra marriage that the woman was the wife of another man. 5 B. H. C. Cr. 17; 2 B. H. C. Cr. 117. Adultery with a Mahomedan's sixth wife is no offence, as a Mahomedan can enter into a legal marriage with four wives only. 1 P. R. 1875 Cr. The offences of adultery and marrying again during the life-time of the husband should not be tried together. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 4. If a man, who has been convicted of adultery with another man's wife, continues his adulterous intercourse, he will be liable to a second conviction and punishment for the fresh act, notwithstanding that the woman had not returned to her husband's protection after the conviction of her paramour. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 150. If a criminal charge of adultery is to be preferred a formal complaint of that offence must be instituted in the manner provided by law, and if it is not, the provision of law will not have been satisfied. 5 A. 233=A. W. N. 1883, see also 24 W. R. 18 Cr.; 4 M. H. C. App. 55. A minor husband cannot be represented by another in a prosecution for adultery. 2 Weir. 235. A prisoner need not be convicted both for adultery and enticing away the woman. 2 W. R. Cr. 35. An adultery being an act which requires the consent of both the parties, it is not sufficient in order to convict a man of an attempt to commit adultery, that he was found in a place in which adultery might have been committed and he was minded to commit it. 1 Weir 569. A conviction under the section cannot stand where the husband has condoned the offence. 4 W. R. Cr. 31. Desertion of the husband by the wife for one year does not ipso facto dissolve the marriage tie. A complaint under s. 497 should not be summarily dismissed on the ground that the man and woman had been living apart for over a year especially. 18 Cr. L. J. 321=38 Ind. Cas. 433.

Section 497, I. P. Code is not restricted in its application and applies to all classes of persons, including Europeans. The accused took up his abode in the house of another man's wife and there was evidence that for 15 days he and she slept in the same bed and there was considerable attachment between them. Held, that the evidence, although circumstantial, was amply sufficient to hold that sexual intercourse had taken place and accused was guilty of an offence under s. 497 I. P. Code. 24 P. L. R. (A) 419=61 Ind. Cas. 238. Where in a case of a charge for adultery the only evidence was a letter written by the complainant's wife to the accused, which was not proved to have been received nor read by the accused. Held that the conviction on such evidence must be set aside. A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 248. In a prosecution under this section, the question of marriage must be proved strictly and any inference, tacit or otherwise, e. g., a tacit admission on the part of the accused that the woman was the wife of the complainant will not avail the prosecution if they fail to prove strictly the marriage between the complainant and the woman whose chastity has been violated. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 481. Adultery per se is not an offence in India. To come under this section the adultery must be without consent or connivance of the husband. 9 Pat. L. T. 397=A. I. R. 1928 Pat.

375. A presumption of valid marriage between a husband and woman arises from their living together as husband and wife even though they belong to different class which ought not to intermarry. A. I. Where validity of marriage is challenged, factum of marriage as well as strict observance of custom or law applicable must be proved. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 880=145 Ind. Cas. 874. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st class.

498. Whoever takes or entices away any woman, who is, and whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of any other man, from that man, or from any person having the care of her on behalf of that man, with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person, or conceals or detains with that intent any such woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The offence which the present section punishes is the taking or enticing away for the unlawful purpose mentioned, a married woman from her husband or from those who have the care of her on his behalf. It is immaterial whether the wife is shown to be a consenting party or not. Her consent is not in question. To support a charge under this section, it must be proved (1) that the woman is married and that fact known to the offender, or that he has reason to believe it; (2) that she has been taken away or enticed from her husband, or from her relatives or friends with whom she may be living in her husband's absence; (3) that the woman may have illicit sexual intercourse with himself or some other person. Persons who conceal or detain a woman who has been taken away knowing the circumstances and having the guilty intention above mentioned, are also punishable under the present section. It is this intention which is the main ingredient in the offence. A person who, being a relative of a married woman would take her away from her husband's house or would conceal or detain her from her husband on account of the misconduct or cruelty of the husband or for any other cause, but without any intention that she should have illicit intercourse with any person, commits no offence. Morgan and Macpherson, 439.

The two essential ingredients of an offence under this section are that the woman enticed away is the wife of the complainant, and that the fact of the marriage is known to the accused. 15 Ind. Cas. 813; 10 A. 580; 1 Weir. 569; 9 P. R. 1899 Cr. 1 Weir 571; 16 P. R. 1891 Cr.; 61 Ind. Cas. 652=22 Cr. L. J. 412. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 194; 141 Ind. Cas. 40=10 O. W. N. 833. The fact and the legality of the marriage is a material element in such a case. 11 A. L. J. 994; 9 M. 9; 20 A. 166; 3 O. C. 342; 17 P. R. 1893 Cr.; 2 P. R. 1879 Cr.; 2 S. L. R. 22 Cr.; 5 P. R. 1894; 6 M. 374; 26 Cr. L. J. 1376; 5 Cr. R. 252; 78 P. R. 1866 Cr.; 13 C. L. R. 125; A. W. N. 1898, 186; A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 300=26 Cr. L. J. 1376=89 Ind. Cas. 464. Where the marriage is disputed there should be strict proof of the same. 145 Ind. Cas. 874=34 Cr. L. J. 1092=38 C. W. N. 113=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 880=1933 Cr. C. 1530. The word "conceals or detains" must be taken to extend to the enticing or inducing a wife to withhold or conceal herself from her husband and assisting her to do so, so well as to physical restraint or prevention of will or action. 28 S. L. R. 140=151 Ind. Cas. 175=35 Cr. L. J. 1254=1934. Cr. C. 625=A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 72. The enticement of the wife must be from the control of the husband before the enticer can be convicted under this section. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 10=27 S. L. R. 482=35 Cr. L. J. 816=148 Ind. Cas. 753.

It must be proved that the accused enticed the complainant's wife from her husband's or father's house with intent to have illicit intercourse with her. 1 C. W. N. 498; 13 A. L. J. 251; 4 W. R. Cr. 50; 15 P. R. 1883 Cr.; 22 W. R. Cr. 72. The Chief Court declined to interfere with a conviction in a case where the husband charged a wife with bigamy and her father and mother with abetment of it—these latter being convicted under s. 498, because the facts complained of as constituting an offence under s. 494, Penal Code, were held sufficient to bring the proceedings under s. 498, Penal Code, within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. 19 P. R. 1882, Cr. The offence contemplated by this section 498 is complete if it appears that the accused went away with the woman in such a manner as to deprive her husband of his control over her; the fact that the woman accompanied the accused of her own free will does not diminish the criminality of the act. 4 Bom. L. R. 435.

It is not necessary to inflict a severe sentence on an accused person convicted under s. 498 I. P. Code when the husband did not take care of his wife, and took no action for a number of months against the accused after he was informed of the abduction. 26 P. L. R. 429. In a prosecution under this section when it appears that the woman is an active abettor in her own abduction, the sentence should be a light one. 27 P. L. R. 642. The word "detains" means by derivation and according to the ordinary use of language "keeps back." But there may be various ways of keeping back. It need not necessarily be by physical force, it may be by persuasion or by allurements and blandishments. 35 Bom. L. R. 1046=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 489; see also A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 256. To "detain" means to keep back from some body or to restrain. Where the woman was willing to live with another and there was nothing to show she was in any way restrained, held that she was not "detained" within the meaning of this section. 103 Ind. Cas. 559=28 Cr. L. J. 703=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 318. Detention is a continuing offence. Previous acquittal on a charge of detention on one occasion is no bar to a subsequent trial. A. I. The omission to state in a chargesheet the accused had knowledge or reason to believe that the person abducted was married woman would not by itself affect the prosecution under this section. 28 Cr. L. J. 419=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 432=101 Ind. Cas. 451. Where two persons are living as husband and wife the Court may draw a presumption of a valid marriage and a person who misbehaves with the wife during that period is liable to be convicted of an offence under this section. 6 Bur. L. J. 122=104 Ind. Cas. 708=28 Cr. L. J. 868=A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 261. Where a woman lives with a man of her own free will and refuses to go back to her husband, the man with whom she thus lives is not guilty under this section. A. I. R. 1928 A. 194; see also 149 Ind. Cas. 228=35 Cr. L. J. 932=11 O. W. N. 672=A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 258; but see A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 72=35 Cr. L. J. 1254=151 Ind. Cas. 175=28 S. L. R. 140. Where a Mahomedan marriage is voidable being performed during a girl's minority, mere non-consummation of marriage after she had attained puberty is not sufficient to give rise to the inference that she exercised the option under Mahomedan law. 1928 Lah. 898. Where the accused is of the neighbouring village and of the same brotherhood as that of the girl, he may be presumed to have necessary knowledge that she is the lawful wife of her husband. 1928 Lah. 898. Where a wife was in charge of her mother and where there was no quarrel between the husband and the wife, held, that the charge of the mother could only be on behalf the husband and a person who took the woman away from the mother would be guilty under s. 498. 1 Weir 573. A marriage between a Banya and a woman born of a Brahman father and Banya mother, which is recognized by the caste to which her husband belongs, is valid and a person who entices away such a woman is guilty of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code. 34 A. 589. Where a Mahomedan wife renounces religion and is then taken away by accused, marriage being dissolved no offence is committed. 145 Ind. Cas. 156=1933 Cr. C. 739=1933 A. L. J. 733=34 Cr. L. J. 869=A. I. R. 1933 All. 433. Where the prosecution and charge are under s. 366 A, conviction under s. 498, without complaint by husband in respect of that offence is bad. 145 Ind. Cas. 922=1933 A. L. J. 701=1933 Cr. C. 1005=A. I. R. 1933 All. 626. Imprisonment for one month and 12 days is not adequate punishment for aggravated form of offence under s. 498. Nor is sentence of six months rigorous imprisonment excessive. 1933 Cr. C. 1391=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 932.

If no complaint is made by any person of an offence under s. 498, proceedings cannot be initiated on a police charge sheet. 2 Weir 235; 39 P. L. R. 1911=12 Cr. L. J. 50. In a case under s. 498, Penal Code a light sentence is sufficient to meet the ends of justice where the abducted woman is an active abettor. 20 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=123 P. L. R. 1614=15 Cr. L. J. 529. As Khatiks are low class sudras they do not follow strict Hindu law, consequently there was no prohibition among them of driving wife by a written deed. 31 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=181 P. L. R. 1914. Enticing or taking away wife temporarily living alone, constitutes an offence under this section. 5 W. R. Cr. 50. But the case is quite different where the husband turns his wife out of doors. 15 P. R. 1883 Cr.; 26 M. 463; but see 17 P. R. 1868 Contra. A conviction by a Magistrate under s. 498 Penal Code, while the husband made a specific complaint under s. 497, was held to be untenable. 18 P. R. 1873 Cr.; 23 P. R. 1895 Cr. Where a husband had driven his wife before making a complaint under s. 498, Penal Code, an order of acquittal of the offence under that section was held valid. 27 P. R. 1870 Cr. Where the woman went to the accused of her own accord a sentence of one year's imprisonment is too severe. 33 P. L. R. 1910=24 P. R. 1910 Cr.=8 Ind. Cas. 226. In a charge under s. 498 of the Penal Code, the proof that the woman and a man, other than the accused were living together, is sufficient to throw the burden of proof on the accused that they were not husband and wife. 8 B. L. R. Ap. 63=17 W. R. Cr. 5. In a case of abduction of a woman admittedly of bad character married to an immature boy, the accused is to be treated very leniently, even if all the ingredients of an offence under s. 498 are technically proved. 12 Cr. L. J.; 500=12 Ind. Cas. 220. Where a man keeps a woman under his protection in a house provided by him, with the knowledge and intent specified under s. 498, he detains her within the meaning of the said section. 14 Cr. L. J. 595. The mere fact that the girl is living in the same house with the accused does not prove that she was enticed away by any or all of them. 149 Ind. Cas. 1106=35 Cr. L. J. 1032=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 86. In cases under s. 498 consent is immaterial. But it is essential to see that there is evidence that the accused took or enticed away the woman, within the meaning of the section. The mere fact that the wife went away of her own accord from her husband's house, and was accompanied a part of the way by the accused, is not sufficient to show that the accused took or enticed the woman away within the meaning of the section. There must be some tangible evidence of taking or enticing. A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 345.

A complainant is incompetent to prosecute another man under s. 498, Penal Code, for enticing away a woman, unless he establishes that he is her lawful husband. 22 P. W. R. 1909 Cr.=12 P. L. R. 1910=4 Ind. Cas. 1042=11 Cr. L. J. 155. If an offence under this section be compromised before the police, it can not be prosecuted subsequently. 22 P. L. R. 1910 Cr.=6 Ind. Cas. 497=11 Cr. L. Where on a charge under s. 366, Penal Code, the police took up the proceedings in which the husband of the woman appeared as a witness, and he asked the Magistrate to drop the proceedings thereunder but said that he intended to prosecute the accused under s. 498, Penal Code, and get him punished, held that there was a complaint in as much as he made an allegation before the Magistrate that the offence should be enquired into. 14 A. L. J. 233=276=32 Ind. Cas. 664=1738 A. Cr. L. J. 72; see also 64 Ind. Cas. 134. For the purposes of conviction under s. 498 Penal Code, there must be an intention that the woman should leave her husband's control without any definite intention that she should return to him or an intention that she should remain away indefinitely. 145 P. L. R. 1917. A conviction under s. 498, Penal Code, can not be said to be illegal on the ground that the only evidence before the Court was not subjected to cross-examination. 18 Cr. L. In a case under this section, the trying Magistrate is competent to issue a warrant instead of issuing a summons for the attendance of the woman alleged to have been enticed away. 50 P. L. R. 1918=44 Ind. Cas. 917. A complaint under s. 498, Penal Code, for detaining a married woman for the purpose of illicit intercourse can be enquired into only in the District where such detention occurs. 51 P. L. R. 1918=44 Ind. Cas. 966. By custom among Rathis, one of the lowest sub-divisions of Rajputs of the Kangra District, a marriage with a widow is valid. The accused who had abducted a woman, so married, with knowledge of the marriage, was guilty of an offence under s. 498. 10 P. R. Cr. 1919=51 Ind. Cas. 842. When a complaint has been made by the husband, the prosecution does not abate by the death of the husband. 4 Lah. 7=71 Ind. Cas. 77=24 Cr. L. J. 29.

It is clear that to constitute an offence under this section, it is not necessary that the woman should be physically restrained or that she be actually prevented from the exercise of her free will or action. 69 Ind. Cas. 458=23 Cr. L. J. 730=1923 Lah. 45; 55 Ind. Cas. 863=21 Cr. L. J. 383. Where the complaint was of the offence of kidnapping and theft of jewels, and there was no allegation that the purpose was to have illicit intercourse. Held that the conviction under s. 498 was illegal. 45 M. L. J. 543=74 Ind. Cas. 949=24 Cr. L. J. 837. Mere statement of the complainant is not sufficient to prove marriage. 42 A. 401=55 Ind. Cas. 736. A conviction under this section is not bad merely because the husband connived at the taking away or concealing of the wife. 54 Ind. Cas. 619=21 Cr. L. J. 139. Where the wife of the complainant is living with the accused of her own free will, the accused cannot be convicted under the section. 18 A. L. J. 311=56 Ind. Cas. 209=21 Cr. L. J. 147. To sustain a conviction under s. 498 I. P. Code, the first essential to be proved is that the complainant and the enticed woman were legally married. 107 Ind. Cas. 98=29 Cr. L. J. 210=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 165. In order to prove marriage, evidence of marriage ceremony must be given. 34 C. W. N. 524=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 447. There may arise a presumption that by co-habitation for a period of 13 years marriage took place, but persons cannot be convicted on presumption of that kind. 30 P. L. R. 643=119 Ind. Cas. 332=30 Cr. L. J. 1051. Where the evidence on a charge of abduction showed no complaint was made for some days after the event, that no steps were taken to trace her and she herself behaved as if she acquiesced in the movement of her abductor, the case is one of elopement and not of abduction. 26 Cr. L. J. 1500=90 Ind. Cas. 156. Where the evidence on a charge of abduction showed that no complaint was made for some days after the event, that no steps were taken to trace her and she herself behaved as if she acquiesced in the movements of her abductors, the case is one of elopement and not of abduction. 26 P. L. R. 517. Mere negligence or inactivity does not prove connivance. There must be proof that the husband acquiesced in by wilfully abstaining from taking steps to prevent adultery. A. I. R. 1926 All. 189=24 A. L. J. 155=27 Cr. L. J. 101=91 Ind. Cas. 533. Only the husband can compound an offence under s. 498. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 330=24 Cr. L. J. 780=74 Ind. Cas. 444. In case of complaint under s. 498 by a person other than husband, Court's leave must be obtained. Absence of such leave is not cured by s. 537 Cr. Pro. Code. 145 Ind. Cas. 874=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 880=1933 Cr. C. 1530=38 C. W. N. 113=34 Cr. L. J. 1092; see also A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 144=34 Cr. L. J. 290=142 Ind. Cas. 150; A. I. R. 1933 All. 626=1933 A. L. J. 701=145 Ind. Cas. 922; A. Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

OF DEFAMATION.

499. Whoever, by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person, intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person, is said, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, to defame that person.

Explanation 1.—It may amount to defamation to impute anything to a deceased person, if the imputation would harm the reputation of that person if living, and is intended to be hurtful to the feelings of his family or other near relatives.

Explanation 2.—It may amount to defamation to make an imputation concerning a company or an association or collection of persons as such.

Explanation 3.—An imputation in the form of an alternative or expressed ironically, may amount to defamation.

Explanation 4.—No imputation is said to harm a person's reputation, unless that imputation, directly or indirectly, in the estimation of others, lowers the moral or intellectual character of that person or lowers the character of that person in respect of his caste or of his calling, or lowers the credit of that person, or causes it to be believed that the body of that person is in a loathsome state, or in a state generally considered as disgraceful.

Illustrations.

(a) A says, "Z is an honest man, he never stole B's watch;" intending to cause it to be believed that Z did steal B's watch. This is defamation, unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

(b) A is asked who stole B's watch. A points to Z, intending to cause it to be believed that Z stole B's watch. This is defamation, unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

(c) A draws a picture of Z running away with B's watch intending it to be believed that Z stole B's watch. This is defamation unless it fall within one of the exceptions.

First Exception.—It is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. Whether or not it is for the public good, is a question of fact.

Second Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, or respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Third Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of any person touching any public question, and respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Illustration,

It is not defamation in A to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting Z's conduct in petitioning Government on a public question, in signing a requisition for a meeting on a public question, in presiding or attending at such a meeting, in forming or joining any society which invites the public support, in voting or canvassing for a particular candidate for any situation in the efficient discharge of the duties of which the public is interested.

Fourth Exception.—It is not defamation to publish a substantially true report of the proceeding of a Court of Justice, or of the result of any such proceedings.

Explanation.—A Justice of the Peace or other office holding an inquiry in open Court preliminary to a trial in a Court of Justice, is a Court within the meaning of the above section.

Fifth Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the merits of any case, civil or criminal, which has been decided by a Court of Justice, or respecting the conduct of any person as a party, witness, or agent, in any such case, or respecting the character of such person, as far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further.

Illustrations.

(a) A says "I think Z's evidence on that trial so contradictory that he must be stupid or dishonest." A is within this exception if he says this in good faith, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses respects Z's character as it appears in Z's conduct as a witness, and no further.

(b) But, if A says, "I do not believe what Z asserted at that trial, because I know him to be a man without veracity." A is not within this exception, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z's character is an opinion not founded on Z's conduct as a witness.

Sixth Exception.—It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion respecting the merits of any performance which its author has submitted to the judgment of the public, or respecting the character of the author, so far as his character appears in such performance, and no further.

Explanation.—A performance may be submitted to the judgment of the public expressly or by acts on the part of the author which imply such submission to the judgment of the public.

Illustrations.

(a) A person who publishes a book, submits that book to the judgment of the public.

(b) A person who makes speech in public, submits that speech to the judgment of the public.

(c) An actor or singer who appears on a public stage, submits his acting or singing to the judgment of the public.

(d) A says of a book published by Z, "Z's book is foolish, Z must be a weak man; Z's book is indecent, Z must be a man of impure mind." A is within this exception if he says this in good faith, inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z respects Z's character only so far as it appears in Z's book, and no further.

(e) But if A says, "I am not surprised that Z's book is foolish and indecent, for he is a weak man and a libertine." A is not within this exception inasmuch as the opinion which he expresses of Z's character is an opinion not founded on Z's book.

Seventh Exception.—It is not defamation in a person having over another any authority, either conferred by law or arising out of a lawful contract made with that other to pass in good faith any censure on the conduct of that other in matters to which such lawful authority relates.

Illustration.

A Judge censuring in good faith the conduct of a witness, or of an officer of the Court; a head of a department censuring in good faith those who are under his orders; a parent censuring in good faith a child in the presence of other children; a school-master whose authority is derived from a parent, censuring in good faith a pupil in the presence of other pupils; a master censuring a servant in good faith for remissness in service; a banker censuring in good faith the cashier of his bank for the conduct of such cashier as such cashier—are within this exception.

Eighth Exception.—It is not defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against any person to any of those who have lawful authority over that person with respect to the subject matter of accusation.

Illustration.

If A in good faith accuses Z before a Magistrate: if A in good faith complains of the conduct of Z, a servant, to Z's master; if A in good faith complains of the conduct of Z, a child, to Z's father—A is within this exception.

Ninth Exception.—It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of any other person, or for the public good.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a shop-keeper, says to B, who manages his business,—"Sell nothing to Z unless he pays you ready money, for I have no opinion of his honesty." A is within the exception, if he has made this imputation on Z in good faith for the protection of his own interests.

(b) A, a Magistrate, in making a report to his superior officer, casts an imputation on the character of Z. Here, if the imputation is made in good faith, and for the public good, A is within the exception.

Tenth Exception.—It is not defamation to convey a caution, in good faith, to one person against another, provided that such caution be intended for the good of the person to whom it is conveyed, or of some person in whom that person interested, or for the public good.

Principle.—The offence of defamation, as it is defined in this Code, consists in the injury offered to reputation, not in any breach of the peace or other consequence that may result from it. The essence of the offence consists in its tendency to cause that description of pain, which is felt by a person who knows himself to be the object of the unfavourable sentiments of his fellow-creature and those inconvenience to which a person who is the object of such unfavourable sentiments is exposed. No distinction is made between written and spoken defamation. The offence is committed whether the words are spoken, written, printed or engraved, or in whatever manner the words, signs, or visible representations conveying the imputations, are expressed.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Scope.—In criminal prosecution question whether statement is made on privileged occasion is to be decided with reference to s. 499. A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 83=32 Cr. L. J. 934=1931 Cr. C. 371=132 Ind. Cas. 553. Defamation in civil and criminal law is quite distinct. 128 Ind. Cas. 371=32 Cr. L. J. 132=8 Rang. 359=A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 81. Mere assenting to a third party's report of what one had said may be defamation. 85 Ind. Cas. 361=26 Cr. L. J. 521=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 320=47 M. L. J. 746. Defamatory statements by a party to a civil proceeding is punishable. 16 S. L. R. 150=84 Ind. Cas. 58=26 Cr. L. J. 234. But Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed with respect to proceedings in a Civil Court to see whether the provisions of s. 209, Cr. Pro. Code and of the Cr. P. Code generally have not been evaded. 86 Ind. Cas. 1005=26 Cr. L. J. 941. Statements in course of judicial proceedings as such have no absolute privilege. 84 Ind. Cas. 977=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 15. Publishing an imputation intending to harm and knowing and having reason to believe, that such imputation would harm the complainant's reputation is enough. 27 Cr. L. J. 868; 22 Bom. L. R. 1224. The rules of the English common law apply to question of civil liability for defamation in India, but criminal liability is determined exclusively by the Penal Code. A defamatory statement whether on oath or otherwise, or contained in a plaint falls within s. 499 and is not absolutely privileged. 7 Pat. L. T. 587; 40 C. 433; 48 C. 388; 24 A. L. J. 329=92 Ind. Cas. 429=97 Cr. L. J. 253. Where a notice published in the newspaper contained an imputation that the complainant has been dishonest in the management of the affairs of a company and was trying to conceal that dishonesty by methods that were themselves dishonest, the imputation is defamatory. 97 Ind. Cas. 431=27 Cr. L. J. 1119. A newspaper is not a person and therefore it is not a criminal offence under s. 499 to defame a newspaper. 99 Ind. Cas. 347=28 Cr. L. J. 139=A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 43; but see A. I. R. 1933 All. 434=34 Cr. L. J. 926=1933 Cr. C. 740. An imputation of insolvency against a person in the way of his trade is per se defamatory. 21 S. L. R. 130=98 Ind. Cas. 124=27 Cr. L. J. 1276=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 54. Calling a person a discharged bankrupt and gambler in an affidavit amounts to defamation. 96 Ind. Cas. 409=27 Cr. L. J. 247=1927 Sind. 58. Publication is sufficiently proved when it is shown that the accused did the act which has the quality of communicating to third persons. 27 Cr. L. J. 1276=21 S. L. R. 130=98 Ind. Cas. 124. A plea, that, though there was publication of the statement, there was no publication to person mentioned in the charge, is a highly technical plea and the defect in the charge is curable under s. 537. 96 Ind. Cas. 496=27 Cr. L. J. 947. Prosecution must make out a case for conviction but the accused must prove that his case comes within the exceptions under s. 105 of the Evidence Act. A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 58. Imputation to a Hindu that he is an outcast is defamatory and is not covered by s. 95. A. I. R. 1928 A. 213. There is a distinction between "fair comment" based on well known or admitted facts and the assertion of unsubstantiated facts for comment. Where comment is made on allegations of fact which do not exist, the very foundation of the plea disappears. A wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which an editor could have discovered to be a misstatement if he had made proper enquiries cannot support the plea of "fair comment" as an editor must make due inquiries as to its truth before disseminating the statement of those facts. 116 Ind. Cas. 99=23 S. L. R. 216. Comment based on misstatement of facts is not protected. A. I. R. 1927 All. 116=27 Cr. L. J. 1361=98 Ind. Cas. 481. Editor should make enquiry before publishing defamatory matter. 145 Ind. Cas. 126=A. I. R. 1933 All. 434=34 Cr. L. J. 926. Truth is not an absolute defence to a prosecution for defamation. 17 N. L. J. 66=A. I. R. 1934. Nag. 129.

Harm the reputation.—In order to establish the offence under this section, it is not necessary to prove that actual harm has been caused. It is sufficient to show that harm was intended to the complainant's reputation or that the accused person knew or had reason to believe that the imputations made by him would harm his reputation. 9 Ind. Cas. 775. If an imputation has no tendency to harm a person in his reputation, it will not amount to defamation although its effect may be to cause that person to suffer in his interest. An imputation which is defamatory when directed against one person, is not necessarily defamatory when directed against another person.—Morgan and Macpherson.

The accused a barrister, and the complainant a pleader, were engaged in a criminal case. The latter made a remark conveying an imputation on the former upon which the former called the latter a liar. Held, that even if the expression made use of by the appellant amount to defamation in point of law, the case came under the provisions of s. 95. A. W. N. 1883, 46. The use of common abusive terms does not constitute an offence under the section. A. W. N. 1883, 36. Although the language of s. 499 I. P. Code is open to the most elastic application, yet Magistrates will act wisely in refusing to adopt it to cases in which no real harm has been done or where civil remedy might more appropriately be sought. A. W. N. 1883, 167. The accused referred to the complainant, who was a Parsutia Kaisth, as a "Kori Chamar" with the result that none of the priests attended the religious ceremony which had to be performed at the complainant's house. Held, that the accused were guilty of an offence under this section. 6 Ind. Cas. 876=11 Cr. L. J. 413. The head man of a caste issued a notice to a member of that caste, intimating that a complaint had been received by the caste that his daughter had committed adultery with a certain person, and requiring him to appear before the caste with his daughter in order to clear her character. Held, that the notice would not furnish the basis of a charge of defamation, as it contained no imputation by the persons who signed it, against the daughter. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 387. Although a person who defames another may so compose himself that little injury results from his offence, yet, he is not excused from the penalties attached to the offence. 1 Weir 594. What the imputation was which a man intended to convey who did not directly express it, and whether he believed or had reason to believe that the imputation should produce a particular sentiment or opinion on the part of those to whom the communication was made are matters of fact, or inference from fact belonging where the judicial functions are divided, to the province of Jury. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 140. An imputation charging a woman of being pregnant by adultery is defamatory. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 474. An expression of opinion by the members of a caste that their caste is superior to another caste is not such an imputation as would warrant a conviction under s. 500 Penal Code. 1 Weir 575. When the question arises whether the words used were intended to form or had the effect of harming the reputation the Court must be put in possession not only of the words used but also of the content in which they were used in order to find the intention and effect of the words. 51 A. 313=26 A. L. J. 1334=30 Cr. L. J. 101=113 Ind. Cas. 213=A. I. R. 1929 All 1. A mere abuse is not ordinarily a defamation but the fact that the words used were those of abuse does not of itself take the article out of the definition of defamation, if, taken as a whole, it was calculated to harm the reputation of the complainant. 112 Ind. Cas. 772=30 Cr. L. J. 4; 30 Cr. L. J. 379=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 234. In the matter of a case under s. 500 when it is said to rest upon allegation made in petition to a Court in determining whether due care was taken by the accused allowances should be made for the intelligence of the accused, his capacity to reason, the circumstances under which he was placed, and the occasion which necessitated his making the imputation. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 779. The essence of the offence of defamation is the publication of an imputation with the knowledge that it will harm the reputation of the person defamed. A. I. R. 1935. All. 743.

Words either spoken or intended to be read etc.—No distinction exists between written and spoken defamation. 2 W. R. Cr. 36; 3 W. R. Cr. 45; 8 M. 175. The making and publicity exhibiting of the effigy of a person, and beating it with shoes amounts to defamation. 2 N. W. P. 435.

Cases.—A complaint of defamation cannot be dismissed on the technical ground that the offence of defamation charged against the accused merged in an offence punishable under s. 182 for which previous sanction was required under s. 195 Cr. Pro. Code. 1 Weir. 585; 1 Weir 580. Where a defamatory poem was contributed to a newspaper and the accused the Editor, Printer, and Publisher of the newspaper, refused to give up the name of his correspondent, but contended that the poem was a satire on ultera pursists and did not refer to any individual, held, that the jury must look at the whole poem and must take it as a whole, and that they must read the poem as reasonable men, and should see whether it was capable of the construction put by the prosecution. Held also that it was not necessary that the whole word should read it as libel but, it is sufficient that those who know the accused would consider it to refer to the complainant by putting reasonable construction on the poem. I. C. W. N. 465. The Indian Penal Code makes no exception in favour of a second or third publication of a defamatory statement as compared with the first. Such an exception would obviously be made a means of defeating the principal provisions of the law of defamation. 12 B. 167. In reply to a book written by the complainant attacking Vaisnavism and its founders, the accused retorted by a similar publication and both books dealt with highly controversial religious matters. Very violent language was used in the latter about the complainant. Held it did not amount to defamation, as the personal character or respectability of the complainant was not in any way assailed. 47 M. L. J. 664=1924 Mad. 898=1924 M. W. N. 768. Where the articles in question described the girls in a particular college that they were habitually misbehaving: Held that the inevitable effect on the reader must be to make him believe that it was habitual with the girls of the college to behave in this way; that being so all the girls in the college individually must suffer in reputation and not a complaint by some of them was competent. A. I. R. 1935 All. 743.

Intention.—The essence of the offence is the intention or knowledge of the offender that the imputation may harm some person's reputation. Where no such intention or knowledge exists, the offence of defamation is not committed. The journeyman printer may be acquitted of defamation on the ground that in setting the types for printing defamatory matter and so aiding towards the circulation thereof, he had not the intention described in the definition, while the person who wrote the defamatory matter, for printing which the journeyman ignorantly set the types, may be convicted, because it may be clear that his purpose was to defame.—Morgan and Macpherson, 442. It is not necessary to constitute an offence under this section that there should be evidence to show that the complainant has been injuriously affected by such alleged defamation. The law requires merely that there should be an intent and the person, who makes or publishes any imputation, should do so intending to harm or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person. 28 C. 63=5 C. W. N. 819; 1 Weir 575; 6 N. W. P. 66; 21 Ind. Cas. 478=14 Cr. L. J. 606; 83 Ind. Cas. 503; 22 Bom. L. R. 1224=59 Ind. Cas. 202=22 Cr. L. J. 58; 43 Ind. Cas. 403=19 Cr. L. J. 115.

Where defamatory statement is made on a privileged occasion the complainant must show malice in fact. 7 C. W. N. 246; 11 C. W. N. 390.

Makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person.—In a case of defamation it must be proved that an alleged libel was made or published. 27 M. 238. The defamatory matter must be published i. e. it must be communicated to some person other than the person to whom it is addressed. 1 Weir 579; 7 C. W. N. 74=30 C. 402. Where a person sends a notice in closed cover containing defamatory matter about the recipient of the notice, but which is not communicated by the writer to any other person it is not such a making or publication as could harm the prosecutor in the sense given to that word in Explanation 4. 7 A. 205 (F. B.)=A. W. N. 1884, 340; 18 B. 205. Handing over manuscript to the printer for being printed is publication. 1 Weir 579. The dictating of a defamatory letter to a third person would amount to publication. 1 Weir 579. In order to sustain a charge under s. 499, it is not material whether the accused originally intended to publish the defamatory matter or not, It is sufficient that he ultimately publishes it. 1 Weir 580. The sending of a newspaper, containing defamatory matter published in Calcutta by post, addressed to a person in Allahabad is a publication of the defamatory matter in the latter place. 3 A. 342. When a defamatory petition presented to a superior public officer is sent to a subordinate officer for inquiry there is a publication of the defamation in the place where the latter may receive the petition. 14 P. R. 1889 Cr. Filing in Court a petition containing imputations against a person calculated to injure his reputation, with intention that other persons should read it amounts to making or publishing the imputation within s. 499 Penal Code. 14 W. R. Cr. 27. Where a person to whom a claim is presented by a legal practitioner on behalf of his client, in replying exceeds the privilege by sending to the legal practitioner a letter containing defamatory statements concerning the client, the publication is complete when the letter is received and read by the legal practitioner. 6 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.=5 Ind. Cas. 892. Defaming husband in wife's presence and vice-versa is sufficient publication within the meaning of this section. But the uttering of a libel by a husband to his wife is no publication. It is settled law that the communication of defamatory matter concerning a particular person to that person only is not publication within the purview of section 499, Penal Code. Ibid. Making allegations in a memorial to the Lieutenant Governor is publication. 13 A. L. J. 681 = 16 Cr. L. J. 482 = 29 Ind. Cas. 322. To be guilty of the offence of defamation it is not necessary that the accused should himself have actually altered the words complained of. Where another person uses defamatory words purporting to report what the accused himself had told him and the accused, who is present at the time, by his conduct and by a few words which he speaks, intends to give and does give the impression that he adopts the words of that other as his own, the accused is guilty of the offence of defamation. 20 L. W. 921 = 47 M. L. J. 746. To constitute the offence of defamation there must be publication to a stranger of the libel complained of. To maintain a prosecution in a particular Court there must be publication within the jurisdiction of the Court. The originals of the libel alleged should be adduced in evidence. 45 M. L. J. 754 = 33 M. L. T. 168 (H. C.) = 1923 M. W. N. 913. For publication it is sufficient if the accused intentionally does an act which has the quality of communicating the alleged libel to a third person or persons generally. 55 A. 253 = 145 Ind. Cas. 392 = 34 Cr. L. J. 952 = 1933 A. L. J. 266 = A. I. R. 1933 All. 210; see also A. I. R. 1937 Sind. 54 = 21 S. L. R. 130. Sending letter containing defamatory matter about President to President of Committee and the letter was placed by President in course of official routine on record and read by other members is sufficient publication within section. A. I. R. 1933 All. 210 = 34 Cr. L. J. 952 = 55 A. 253 = 1933 Cr. C. 366 = 1933 A. L. J. 266. Where A and B conspires to defame Y by drawing a document containing the imputations and the document is left with B, there is no publication. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 487 = 32 Cr. L. J. 767 = 1931 Cr. C. 551 = 1931 M. W. N. 366 = 131 Ind. Cas. 654.

Explanation 1.—It is a defamatory libel and crime, though not actionable wrong [Broom v. Ritchie, (1905) 6 F. 942; 5 B. 580] to write and publish words injurious to the reputation of any deceased person, provided it is done with a malevolent purpose to vilify the memory of the deceased and with a view to injure the posterity and therefore with a design to break the peace. Per Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Topham, 4 T. R. 126; see also R. v. Labouchere, (1884) 12 Q. B. D. at 322. In the last named case, Lord Coleridge observed: “The locus classicus on this subject is Rex v. Topham, (1791) 4 T. R. 126”; see also R. v. Ensor, 3 T. L. R. 366, where Stephen J. said: “There must be a vilifying of the deceased with a view to injure his posterity.” So “publication tending to disturb the minds of living individuals and to bring them into contempt and disgrace by reflecting upon persons who are dead, is an offence against the law.” Per Abbot C. J. in Rex v. Hunt, (1824) 2 St. Tr. N. S. at p. 98. Here the essence of the offence consists in its tendency to cause that description of pain which is felt by a person who knows herself to be the object of his fellow creatures and in those inconveniences to which a person who is the object of such unfavourable sentiments is exposed. 41 A. 311 = 17 A. L. J. 214 = 49 Ind. Cas. 855 = 20 Cr. L. J. 231.

Explanation 2.—This explanation is intended to include a company or an association or collection of persons as such with the word “persons” as used in the definition so that the latter should not be limited to individuals. In a case in which the explanation is properly called into use the identity of the company or association or collection of persons must be maintained throughout with reference to the imputation said to have been made concerning them as such with intention of harming their reputation so that thereby they are defamed. 29 C. W. N. 904 = 42 C. L. J. 178 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1539; see also 55 C. 1280; 1 Pat. 414; 55 C. 1280.

According to English law it is also a defamatory libel and a crime to write and publish words injurious to the reputation of any body of individuals without referring to any individual in particular. Rex v. Osborn, W. Kel. 230; Rex v. Williams, 2 B & Ald. 595; Rex v. Gathercole, 2 Lewin. C. C. 237; see also South Hutton Coal Co. v. N. E. News Association (1894) 1 Q. B. 133.

Explanation (3).—This explanation has followed the English law on the subject where it has been held that ironical phrase may amount to a libel. Boydell v. Jones, 4 M. & W. 446.

Explanation (4).—It will be the duty of the Judge in the trial of cases of defamation not to decide the question whether an imputation is or is not defamatory by reference to any particular standard, however correct, of honour, or morality, or of taste; but to extend an impartial protection to opinions which he regards as erroneous, and to feelings with which he has no sympathy. India is inhabited by races which differ widely from one another in manners, tastes and religious opinions. Practices which are regarded as innocent by one large portion of society, excite the horror of another large portion. A Hindu would be driven to despair if he knew that he was believed by persons of his own race to have done something which a Christian or a Mussalman would consider as indifferent or as laudable. Where such diversities of opinion exist, that part of the law which is intended to prevent pain arising from opinion ought to be sufficiently flexible to those diversities—Morgan and Macpherson, 440. An imputation that a Mahomedan had killed a cow in his compound cannot be said to harm his reputation, or lower his moral or intellectual character, or lower his character in respect of his caste or calling or lower his credit within the meaning of this section, 5 C. P. L. R. 53. It must lower him in other people's estimation. Anything which lowers him in his own estimation is not defamation. 7 A. 205 (F. B.). It is defamatory to say without cause that any one is ex-communicated. The fact that all Muhammadans are generally speaking, of one caste does not make it any the less defamatory, and the word 'caste' is not entirely confined to Hindus. It refers to any class who keep themselves socially distinct or inherit exclusive privileges. 25 L. W. 357=99 Ind. Cas. 943=28 Cr. L. J. 207=A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 397.

This explanation does not apply where the words used and forming the basis of a charge are per se defamatory. 9 A. 420.

Exceptions.—The exceptions to s. 499. I. P. Code would seem to have been drafted with reference to the question of qualified privileges as recognised by the law of England, omitting all reference to the question of privilege in connection with statements made in judicial proceedings or to other classes of absolute privilege recognised by the law of England. The provisions of the I. P. Code and also those of the Evidence Act of 1872 are mainly based upon the English Law. Whenever the legislature in this country intended to depart from the English Law, they made their intention clear by express enactment. In considering the intention of the legislature, the law of England at the time of passing of the Indian enactment can be taken into consideration. The canons of construction laid down by Lord Herschell are applicable only where it is intended to codify existing law but not where new law is created. The English common law right of absolute privilege in respect of judicial proceedings is inapplicable to India. 14 Ind. Cas. 659=13 Cr. L. J. 275=23 M. L. J. 39=36 M. 216. Even where the accused deny having made the statements alleged to be defamatory, they are entitled to call evidence to prove that the allegations if made by him would bring them within one of the exceptions of the section. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 167. Although it is for the prosecution to make out a case for conviction, the accused person must prove the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exceptions to s. 499. 105 Ind. Cas. 120=28 Cr. L. J. 996=A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 58.

First exception.—To entitle a person to the benefit of this exception, the statement made must not only be proved to be true, but it must be shown that their publication was for the public good. 9 Ind. Cas. 775; see also A. I. R. 1934 All. 904=152 Ind. Cas. 1057=1934 Cr. C. 1129; A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 403=34 Cr. L. J. 667=1933 Cr. C. 1538=144 Ind. Cas. 63. In the absence of good faith question of public good need not be considered. 28 C. W. N. 579=26 Cr. L. J. 71=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 611=83 Ind. Cas. 63. It is good defence in criminal cases that the words complained of are in fact true, and that it was for the public benefit that the matters charged should be published, even though the actual motive of publication is malevolence. The defence of qualified privileges extends to communications made by a person who has a legal, moral or social duty to some particular person or persons, who have a corresponding interest or privilege to receive it, and such communications might be not only allegations of fact that could be proved to be true but also expressions of opinion and personal inferences. In order to be entitled to the benefit of the exceptions, the accused must show that he in good faith made the imputation in self-defence or for public good. He must have acted with due care and caution, and the actual words used, the manner in which the words are published, the persons to whom they are communicated, must all be limited to the reasonable requirements of the occasion. 8 Ind. Cas. 209. In order to come under this exception the imputation must be true and must be made for public good.—Morgan and Macpherson, 443. In all such cases the person who publishes such imputation renders a greater service to the public. But where the spreading of the true reports only hurts the feelings of an individual, without producing any compensating advantage to the public, certainly it is not protected under this exception. Ibid, 443. Where a matter is of public interest the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale. 13 Bom. L. R. 1187; see also 1 L. B. R. 139; 4 C. 124; 3 Bom. L. R. 188. The first exception exempts any imputation made or published for the public good and concludes as follows:—Whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact. Although the imputations are true and made for public good, yet, on considering the manner of the publication, i. e., in a newspaper, the accused may be held not to have published it for the public good. 19 B. 763. In the absence of good faith, the publication of a circular that a person has been put out of caste does not come within this exception. 6 A. L. J. 472=9 Cr. L. J. 535=2 Ind. Cas. 226. A defamatory imputation even if it be true is not by itself good ground for making it. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 55. Any exception on the ground of good faith or public good fails if the publication was made in a newspaper. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 769; see also 15 M. 214=2 M. L. J. 127; 3 Bom. L. R. 188. In an action for defamation, the proper question for the purpose of ascertaining the good faith of the accused is not, whether the allegations made by him are true, but whether he had after due care and attention, good reason for believing them to be true. 4 C. 124. A statement in order to come under the first exception to s. 499 of the Penal Code, must be true in fact. 40 A. 271=16 A. L. J. 201=43 Ind. Cas. 823.

Second exception.—The public conduct of public functionaries is allowed to be discussed, provided that such discussion is conducted in good faith. It will be observed that in this and generally in the following exceptions, it is not required that an imputation should be true. It is requisite only that it should be made in good faith. "To require in these cases that the imputation should be true, would be to render these exceptions mere nullities. Whether a public functionary is or is not fit for his situation—whether a person who has bestirred himself to get up a petition in favour of a public measure, ought to be considered as an enlightened and public-spirited citizen or a foolish meddler—whether a person who has been tried for an offence was or was not guilty—which of two witnesses who contradicted each other on a trial ought to be believed—whether a portrait is live—whether a song has been well sung—whether a book is well written—these are questions about which honest and discerning men may hold opinion diametrically opposite; and to require a man to prove to the satisfaction of a court of law that the opinion which he has expressed on such a question is a right opinion, is to prohibit all discussion on such questions". Morgan and Macpherson, 444. "Good faith" does not require logical infallibility but due care and attention. 51 C. L. J. 472=34 C. W. N. 1070. Publishing defamatory statements and also denying it is not using due care. A. I. R. 1933 All. 434=1933 Cr. C. 740=145 Ind. Cas. 126.

Third exception.—Applies to public men who are not public functionaries. Persons who hold no office may yet take a very active part in urging or opposing the adoption of measures in which the community is deeply interested. Every person is allowed to comment in good faith on the proceedings of these volunteer servants of the public with the same freedom with which he is allowed to comment on the proceedings of the official servants of the public.—Morgan and Macpherson, 444. Every subject has a right to comment on those acts of public men which concern him as a subject of the realm, if he does not make the commentary a cloak for malice and slander. 1 B. H. C. App. 85. The word "malice" in the legal sense of the term, is not limited to hostility of feeling, but by virtue of its etymological origin, extends to any state of the mind, which is wrong or faulty (whether exercised in action by excess or defect), such as would be unjustifiable in the circumstances, and incompatible with thoroughly innocent intentions. It is not necessary that such impropriety of feeling should in all cases be established by evidence extrinsic to the comment, which is the subject of the complaint. 31 B. 293. It is impossible to justify allegation of defamation on the ground of fair comment, the moment it is shown that the allegation is based upon a mis-statement of facts. 98 Ind. Cas. 481=27 Cr. L. J. 1361=A. I. R. 1927 All. 116. Publication of a verbatim account of an incident that took place in a municipal meeting by a Municipal councillor is privileged under this section. 8 S. L. R. 143=16 Cr. L. J. 141=27 Ind. Cas. 205. Law does not permit a lower standard of good faith in defamatory statements in the discussion of public statements. Any criticism must be justly and reasonably deducible from the public conduct in question. 76 Ind. Cas. 230=25 Cr. L. J. 134=17 S. L. R. 245. A printer is liable for defamatory matter printed by him. A. I. R. 1933 All. 434=34 Cr. L. J. 926=145 Ind. Cas. 126.

Fourth Exception.—"The privilege is given to report of proceedings in the Court as it is for the public benefit that they should be informed of what took place substantially as if they were present." Per Sir Gorell Barnes P. in Furniss v. Cambridge Daily News, Ltd (1907) 23 T.L.R. at p. 706. So "a full and faithful report may be considered as enlarging the Court and allowing the great body of the public to be present at the trial." Per Lord Campbell C. J. in Andrews v. Chapman, 3 C. & K. 289. But the report must be confined strictly to what actually took place in Court. Furniss v. Cambridge Daily News Ltd., 23 T. L. R. 705 (C. A.). A report need not be a verbatim production of what took place in Court but it must be substantially a fair account of what took place in Court. Andrews v. Chapman, 3 C. & K. 289. A fair abstract can be published. Millissilah v. Lloyds, 46 L. J. C. P. 404. If any comments are made, they should not be made a part of the report. The report should be confined to what took place in Court and the two things, report and comment, should be kept separate. Andrews v. Chapman, 3 C. & K. 288.

Explanation.—This privilege is not confined to the proceedings of superior Court. Usill v. Hules, 3 C. P. D. 310; Kimeer v. Press Association, 1 Q. B. 65.

Cases.—26 M. 464.

Fifth exception.—All persons are allowed freely to discuss in good faith the proceedings of courts of law, and the characters of parties, agents and witnesses, as connected with those proceedings. It is almost universally acknowledged that the courts of law ought to be thrown open to the public. But the advantage of throwing them open to the public will be small indeed, if the few who are able to press their way into a court are forbidden to report what has passed there to the vast numbers who were absent, or if those who are allowed to know what has passed are not allowed to comment on what has passed.—Morgan and Macpherson, 445.

Sixth Exception.—The object of this exception is that the public should be aided by comment, in its judgment of the public performance submitted to its judgment. Comment otherwise defamatory is justified on this ground alone. The comment must, therefore, make it clear to the public that decision is invited, only on such evidence as is supplied by the public performance. It follows that an imputation on an author made by a critic, without reference express or implied, to the work under criticism, if in terms so general as to be capable of conveying an unfavourable impression of him, apart from what appears in his work, cannot be justified by the critic, on the ground that his intention was to base his imputation solely on the work reviewed, and that he had in his mind passages therein supporting the imputation. The responsibility of the critic is to be gauged by the effect, which his comment is calculated to produce, and not by what he says was his intention. It is not enough that he should intend to form his opinion, on the work before him; he is also bound, in the words of the exception, to express his opinion with due care and caution, and to give the public no ground for supposing that he is speaking of any thing but the performance submitted to its judgment. 31 B. 293. The word "malice" in the legal use of the term is not limited to hostility of feeling, but by virtue of its etymological origin, extends to any state of the mind, which is wrong or faulty (whether evinced in action by excess or defect) such as would be unjustifiable in the circumstances, and incompatible with thoroughly innocent intentions. It is not necessary that such impropriety of feeling should in all cases be established by evidence extrinsic to the comment, which is the subject of the complaint. For, whether fair comment is to be regarded as following under a branch of the law of privilege or not, it cannot excuse an injury, arising not from the mere act of criticism, but from a state of mind in the critic, which is in itself unjustifiable. And the excuse may be so forfeited, either by reason of an evil intent in him or by reason of mere recklessness in making an unwarrantable assertion. For, then, the comment would not be fair comment at all. The right of fair comment involves two essentials first: that the imputation should be comment on the work criticised, and second, that it should be fair, that is to say, if it professes to be an inference drawn from the contents of that work, it must be an inference which it is possible to draw therefrom. Good faith requires not logical infallibility, but due care and attention. But how far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care and caution must, in each case, be considered with reference to the general circumstances and the capacity and intelligence of the person, whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to habits of precise reasoning. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that good faith in the formation or expression of an opinion, can offer no protection to an imputation, which does not purport to be based on that, which is the legitimate subject of public comment. Ibid.

Seventh Exception.—"By this exception we allowed a person under whose authority others have been placed, either by their own consent or by the law, to censure, in good faith, those who are so placed under his authority, as far as regards matter to which that authority relates." Note R. Caste associations are autonomous: the powers vested in their constituted heads being, subject to any special custom, those necessary for the protection of the interest committed to their charge. The Court's only duty is to see that these powers are exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice; that is, in the majority of cases, after the person to be affected by their exercise has been heard and his defence has received fair consideration. 45 M. L. J. 116=72 Ind. Cas. 165=24 Cr. L. J. 325=1923 Mad. 587.

Eighth exception.—Two ingredients are essential to the establishing of the protection under exception 8; (1) that the accusation must be made to a person having authority over the party accused; and (2) that the accusation must be preferred in good faith, that is to say, with such reasonable care and attention on the part of the person making it, in first satisfying himself of the truth and justice of the charge, as an ordinary man should be expected to exercise. 6 A. 220=A. W. N. 1884, 53; see also 8 B. H. C. R. Cr. 168. A complaint made bona fide to proper public officer is protected. A. I. R. 1924 All. 445=22 A. I. R. 65=70 Ind. Cas. 640. A defamatory statement contained in a complaint filed before a Magistrate is not absolutely privileged. 46 M. 728=27 Cr. L. J. 1026. Report to police that a lost article was in the accused's house falls under this exception. 95 Ind. Cas. 480; see also 27 P. L. R. 171. Doctrine of absolute privilege does not apply in moffussil in India. A. I. R. 1928, Nag. 58. Petition to President of Union Board that person is disqualified for election on account of leprosy does not amount to defamation. A. I. R. 131 Mad. 487. A defamatory statement made by a person opposing the registration of his will in his petition to the registrar, objecting to the registration, is not absolutely privileged. 13 Cr. L. J. 508=15 Ind. Cas. 652. A statement made by a villager casting imputation on the character of a co-villager in a complaint to the higher authorities is privileged only if the imputation is substantially true and made in good faith. 15 Cr. L. J. 281=23 Ind. Cas. 489. Petition to President of Union Board that certain person is disqualified for election on account of leprosy does not amount to defamation. 1931 Cr. C. 551=32 Cr. L. J. 767=A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 487. A petitioner should not be convicted for making defamatory statements in application for transfer. 17 C. W. N. 449=18 Ind. Cas. 349=40 C. 441, Note. In order to deprive a person of the privilege given under this section, express malice on the part of the accused must be proved. 11 C. W. N. 390=5 Cr. L. J. 160; 7 A. 906=A. W. N. 1885, 272. Where a defamatory statement is made on a privileged occasion, the complainant must show malice in fact. 7 C. W. N. 246. Otherwise accusation preferred in good faith to authorised persons are privileged. 1 Weir 608. But in such a case the burden of proving good faith in respect of such accusation lies on the accused. 1 Weir 608. Defamatory statement to a Municipal council is not privileged. 1 Weir 612. The accused, the defendant in a civil suit, in his written petition to the Deputy Commissioner, charged the Munsif trying the case with conspiracy with the plaintiff to get up a false case, but was not able to prove the charge; held that he was rightly convicted of defamation. 21 P. R. 1887 Cr. Bringing to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner the fact that the complainant, a Medical Officer in charge of hospital, was leading an immoral life and to ask for his removal, is no defamation and comes within this exception. 7 C. P. L. R. Cr. 20. To make a statement to a superior officer that a Government servant had borrowed for his immediate superior from persons connected with the department would amount to defamation. 1 Weir 585. A defamatory statement contained in a complaint filed before a Magistrate is not absolutely privileged for the exception applicable expressly lays down that the privilege conferred by it on persons who prefer accusations against others extends only to those who make them in good faith. The burden of proving the same is on the party pleading the exception. 6 Mys. L. J. 496.

Ninth exception.—Exceptions (1) and (9) codify those portions of the law of libel and slander treated in English text book or books under the heads of justifications and qualified privilege. In order to be entitled to the benefit of the exceptions the accused must show that he in good faith made the imputation in self-defence or for public good. He must have acted with due care and caution, and the actual words used, the manner in which the words are published, the persons to whom they are communicated, must all be limited to the reasonable requirements of the occasion. 8 Ind. Cas. 209; 15 B. 351. That the English rule of absolute privilege does not apply proprio vigore in India is apparent from the proviso to s. 132 of the Evidence Act, and the case must be decided with reference to this section. 13 Ind. Cas. 217. See also 8 Ind. Cas. 220=11 Cr. L. J. 594; 317 P. R. 1913; A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 58=28 Cr. L. J. 996=105 Ind. Cas. 820; A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 823=55 C. 85=28 Cr. L. J. 877=46 C. L. J. 227=104 Ind. Cas. 717; A. I. R. 1935 Sind. 81. But see 14 Ind. Cas. 659=36 M. 216; 4 Bur. L. J. 147; 97 Ind. Cas. 354. Exception 9 to section 499 only protects certain imputations made in good faith. 128 Ind. Cas. 371=32 Cr. L. J. 132=8 Rang. 359=A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 81. As regards this exception, the Law Commissioners said: "we do not require that an imputation should be true; we require only that it should be made in good faith. For to require in these cases that the imputation should be true, would be to render these exceptions mere nullities. It is plainly desirable that a merchant should disclose to his partners his unfavourable opinion of the honesty of a person with whom the firm has dealings. It is desirable that a father should caution his son against marrying a woman of bad character. But if the merchant is permitted to say to his partners, if the father is permitted to say to his son, only what can be legally proved before a Court, it is evident that the permission is worth nothing. Whether an imputation be or be not made in good faith is a question for the Courts of law. The burden of the proof will lie sometimes on the person who has made the imputation, and sometimes on the person on whom the imputation has been thrown." Note R. Reversioner making imputations against widow if directly interested is protected if the imputations are not disproportionate to the facts. 26 Cr. L. J. 428=85 Ind. Cas. 44=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 246. It is doubtful whether a complaint for defamation against a lawyer for matters uttered in Court in the course of his professional duties cannot be entertained. 50 M. 667=25 L. W. 295. Person claiming protection under this exception must prove good faith for protecting interest. 1929 All. 1. A pleader is entitled to the presumption that the question he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. The presumption, therefore, is that a question asked in cross-examination making an imputation, affords no ground for criminal prosecution. To rebut this presumption, there must be convincing evidence that the pleader was actuated by an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interest of his client in the cause. 41 C. 514=18 C. Relevant statements made by a witness on oath or solemn affirmation in a judicial proceeding are not absolutely protected from being made the subject of a prosecution for defamation by the proviso to section 132 of the Evidence Act in cases where the witnesses have not objected to answering the questions put to them. 28 L. But no complaint against a witness should be permitted until the Court before whom the witness gave evidence in answer to questions put to him which are relevant to the enquiry has expressed its opinion on such questions. 28 S. L. R. 251=152 Ind. Cas. 346=1934 Cr. C. 955=A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 114. The rule is the same as regards statements of the accused under s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 28 Bom. L.R. 1 ; 9 Cr. L.J. 276=1 Ind. Cas. 48. A printer to escape liability on the ground of absence must prove that he was absent in good faith and show who was the printer in his absence. A. I. R. 1928 All. 400. The statement of a person charged with an offence in answer to a question by the Court trying him, is an absolutely privileged one, so as to make him not liable to be punished for an offence under s. 499 in respect of the statement. 14 Ind. Cas. 659=36 M. 216. A plaintiff to a suit is not privileged under exception 9 unless the allegations made in the plaint were made in good faith. 8 Ind. Cas. 220=11 Cr. L. J. 594. A statement made by persons in a pleading is not privileged. 5 C. W. N. 293 ; 3 L. B. R. 265 ; 8 Ind. Cas. 220 ; 23 C. 867 ; 2 W. R. Cr. 36 ; 14 W. R. Cr. 27 ; 3 C. L. R. 122 ; 49 M. 728 (F. A defamatory statement made in an affidavit is not privileged, if it was wholly irrelevant to the enquiry to which the affidavit related. 8 C. W. N. 292. The English doctrine of absolute privilege is inapplicable but the party can rely on exception to this section. 128 Ind. Cas. 371=32 Cr. L. J. 132=1931 Rang. 81. A defamatory statement made in answer to the question by a police officer, in the course of an investigation, is a privileged communication, because such a person is bound by s. 161 Cr. Pro. Code to answer truly all questions put to him, except such as tend to criminate himself, and is therefore entitled to the protection which the law gives to the witnesses. 16 M. 235=1 Weir 587 ; see also 47 B. 15=24 Bom. L. R. 400 ; 20 Bom. L. R. 601. It is opposed to public policy to prosecute a party to a civil suit, who is under an obligation to speak the truth under ss. 5 and 13 of the Indian Oaths Act, in answer to questions put to him by Court, for defamation in respect of such answers, even though such answers are not true and be not made in good faith. 30 M. 222=6 Cr. L. J. 130 ; see also 11 M. 477. But in later cases it has been held that such statements enjoin qualified privilege. 52 M. 432. Plaintiff to a suit is not privileged unless the allegations made in the plaint were made in good faith. 8 Ind. Cas. 220=11 Cr. L. J. 594 ; 34 P. R. 1889 Cr. 1 L. B. R. 84 ; 65 Ind. Cas. 204 ; but see 40 A. 341 (F. B.) ; 20 A. L. J. 597.

No defamatory statement by a witness is protected unless it is made in good faith within the meaning of the exceptions to s. 499 I. P. Code. The true test of immunity in the case of witnesses, as of other persons, is whether an exception to that section is established in its entirety. 14 P. R. 1893 Cr. A statement made by a witness under examination, wholly irrelevant to the matter of enquiry, uncalled for by any question put to him, and introduced by the witness voluntarily and maliciously for his own purpose, and in order to injure the reputation of another, is not privileged. 32 C. 756=9 C. W. N. 911. A defamatory statement made by one person regarding another in a complaint presented by the former against the latter are absolutely privileged. 11 M. T. 431=14 Ind. Cas. 757=13 Cr. L. J. 293=37 M. 110. A pleader or Mookhtar is not liable to a charge of defamation, if relying on the statements of his client, he introduced into a pleading in good faith, a defamatory statement. 2 N. W. P. 473. Where a letter, written, by a creditor of a firm and circulated amongst other persons who dealt with the same firm, contained a statement that one of the members of the firm had filed a petition for insolvency, with the object of collecting the outstandings and defeating the creditors of the firm, held that the statement came under exception 9, illustration (a) of s. 499, the evidence having shown that the latter was written with the intention of protecting the writer's own interest and in a manner which was honest and bona-fide. 9 C. W. N. 195=2 Cr. L. J. 47. Where a defamatory statement is made to his solicitor, it may be that the same amount of care and attention should not be expected as when the statement is made to a stranger, and in deciding the question of the client's honest belief, the Court should consider whether he made the statement to protect his own interest. 5 Bom. L. R. 122. To give out that a woman had miscarriage without any knowledge whether she was married or not would amount to defamation because the person who makes the statement would have reasonable belief that such imputation would harm the reputation of the woman in case she was not married and if such statement is made in a witness box and especially so in examination-in-chief when the character of the woman is not a fact in issue, the witness is not protected by s. 132, Evidence Act, unless the Judge himself asked the question. A. I. R. 1930 All. 493.

Where an accused who was charged with having beaten the complainant stated before the panchayat that he had kept the complainant for 10 years the statement is one made in good faith in order to explain his relations with the woman to account for the beating and is privileged. 96 Ind. Cas. 394=27 Cr. L. J. 938.

Exception 9 can only afford protection, when the defamatory statement has been made in good faith for the protection of the person making it or of any other person or for public good. 24 Bom. L. R. 400=69 Ind. Cas. 94. In a contest relating to an office, the allegation that the complainant is a 'pichlay and lawaris' was made in order to disqualify him. Held, it is covered by exception 9. 67 Ind. Cas. 589=23 Cr. L. J. 429. Where a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise his liability must be determined by a reference to s. 499 I. P. Code and he is entitled only to the benefit of the privilege mentioned in the section. 48 C. 388=24 C. W. N. 982=22 Cr. L. J. 31; see also 22 Cr. L. J. 159; 49 Ind. Cas. 109=20 Cr. L. J. 125; 17 Cr. L. J. 381=35 Cas. 813. A statement made by a party to suit in good faith and for the prosecution of his interest, and which is relevant to the matter in issue, falls under exception 9 of s. 499 of the Penal Code and is privileged. In order to take such a statement out of the exception express malice must be proved. 45 Ind. Cas. 833=19 Cr. L. J. 641; see also 20 Bom. L. R. 601; 9 Bur. L. T. 136=17 Cr. L. J. 213=34 Ind. Cas. 325. Where an advocate was charged with defamation in respect of statement made by him as party in departmental proceeding, the burden is on him of proving that his case falls under one of the exceptions to s. 499. A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 83.

Communication by members of caste.—"Caste" refers to any class keeping themselves socially distinct or inheriting exclusive privilege. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 397=28 Cr. L. J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 943. A privileged communication means a communication which is made by a member of a caste to the other members, inviting an enquiry into the conduct of persons against whom the allegations are directed. 14 Bom. L. R. 585=13 Cr. L. J. 687=46 Ind. Cas. 335. Defamatory statement made by a member of a caste against another member of the same caste for protection of his own interest is privileged under this exception. 1 Weir 609; see also 7 M. 36=1 Weir 610; 11 Bom. L. R. 638=3 Ind. Cas. 744; 22 C. 46; 6 M. 381=1 Weir 595; 6 M.H.C. App. 46; 47 M.L.J. 8; A.I.R. 1924 All. 299=46 A. 64=21 A. L. J. 765=25 Cr. L. J. 327=77 Ind. Cas. 183; 22 A.L.J. 79=77 Ind. Cas. 824; 27 Cr. L. J. 296=24 A. L. J. 171=92 Ind. Cas. 584; 33 Cr. L. J. 472. But in the absence of good faith the statement is not privileged. 3 A. 664. Where the accused made a statement at a caste that a child was born to a woman of adulterous intercourse, it amounts to defamation unless he proves it was true or that he made it in good faith. 76 Ind. Cas. 393=25 Cr. L. J. 168. Imputation that a Hindu is an outcaste is defamatory and is not covered by s. 95. A. I. R. 1928 All. 213=26 A. L. J. 361=29 Cr. L. J. 451=108 Ind. Cas. 690; see also A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 97=28 N. L. R. 106=33 Cr. L. J. 855. Imputation of outcasting is defamatory even to Mahomedans. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 397=28 Cr. L. J. 207=99 Ind. Cas. 943. Bringing to notice of Panchayat behaviour of person charged with social offence is covered by exceptions 9 and 10. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 377=1933 Cr. C. 1094=10 O. W. N. 778.

Public good.—Where a matter is of public interest, the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale. 13 Bom. L. R. 1187=12 Cr. L. J. 595=12 Ind. Cas. 971. In the absence of good faith public good need not be considered. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 611=28 C. W. N. 579=26 Cr. L. J. 71=83 Ind. Cas. 631.

Good faith.—Under s. 27 of Act XVIII of 1882 proof of existence of the facts relied on as a defence should be given before good faith could be presumed in a case of defamation, and the onus lies on the person making the imputation. 4 W. R. Cr. 22; 1 Weir 580. The absence of reasonable cause is evidence of the absence of good faith. 1 Weir 607. In dealing with exceptions 8 and 9 the question of good faith should be considered. The definition in s. 52 I. P. Code, does away with the presumption that the accused acted bona fide until the contrary is proved; and under the Indian Law the accused should show that he has made the imputation not without due care and circumspection. In deciding the question of good faith the Court should take into account the intellectual capacity of the person, his predilections and the surrounding facts. 56 C. 1013=33 C. W. N. 446=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 346. It is against public policy to prosecute complainants for statements contained in petitions presented in good faith for their protection. 1929 M. W. N.

598. In order to establish good faith it must be shown that the accused acted with due care and caution. 28 C. W. N. 579=83 Ind. Cas. 631. A finding of privilege is not finding of good faith A. I. R. 1926 All. 287=24 A. L. J. 329=27 Cr. L. J. 253=92 Ind. Cas. 429. Good faith should be judged from the intellectual capacity of the person, his predilections and the surrounding facts. Where the accused acted with a desire to protect himself rather than to injure others he is protected by Exceptions 8 and 9. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 346=33 C. W. N. 446=56 C. 1013; see also A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 779=1929 Cr. C. 523.

Tenth exception.—"To bring this case within Exception X of Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused intended in good faith to convey a caution to one person against another, that such caution was intended for the good of the person to whom it was conveyed, or of some person in whom that person was interested, or for the public good, and that the caution should be conveyed by the proper means". Per Collins C. J. in 15 M. 214 at p. 216. Where in an application for the transfer of a criminal case, the accused in the present case stated the complaint against him was instituted under the instigation of the complainant in the present case, for the purpose of prejudicing him in the defence to a civil suit which the latter had caused to be brought against him held that the statement did not amount to defamation, as the imputation was made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it. 22 A. 234=A. W. N. 1900, 46. Statement of the ability of a person working under the accused for his own interest is privileged. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 474. A letter written by a Brahmin to the Brahmin community of the neighbourhood with a view to obtain their decision on a matter affecting his own religious interests and that of the Brahmin community, if written in good faith falls within exceptions 8 and 10 of this section. 8 B. H. C. Cr. 168. Exception 10 deals with cases for instance where one man warns another against employing a third person in his service saying that he is a dishonest person. Where at a caste meeting the accused was proved to have stated that the complainant's wife had been married before and a prosecution for the offence of defamation was launched against him. Held that that exception was inapplicable. 34 C. W. N. 580=31 Cr. L. J. 1225=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 695.

The complainant was put out of caste at a meeting of his caste fellows for having taken water from an untouchable man. The accused told some of the members of the caste not to take water from the hands of the complainant, as in that event they would incur the penalty of excommunication. Held that the accused was not guilty of any offence and his case fell within exception 10 to section 499 I. P. Code. 22 A. L. J. 79=25 Cr. L. J. 472.

Who can complain in a defamation case.—Where wife is defamed, the husband can complain against the person defaming his wife. A. W. N. 1891, 188; 25 B. 151 (F. B.); 14 M. 379; but see 22 P. R. 1884 Cr.; 37 P. R. 1887 Cr. But for the purpose of instituting a criminal proceeding under this section a mother and son are not in the same position as husband and wife. A. W. N. 1893, 207. The death of the complainant during the course of criminal proceeding for defamation, necessarily terminates those proceedings. 8 P. W. R. 1908 Cr.=7 Cr. L. J. 203=112 P. L. R. 1908. Where the complainant prosecuted the accused person for defaming his sister-in-law, held that as there was no imputation made against the complainant, there was no defamation of him within the meaning of s. 499, and that his sister-in-law being the person defamed ought herself to have made the complaint. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 392=Rg. 48 of 1888. The word "aggrieved" in s. 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in cases of defamation must be treated as equivalent to the expression "person injured," the object of the section apparently being to limit the right of complaint to person who has suffered the injury L. B. R. (1872-1892), 617. President of a Municipality cannot sue for defamation of subordinate officers of the Municipality. 26 M. 43=2 Weir 232=12 M. L. J. 418. Where a servant of the complainant has been defamed, he cannot bring a case under this section against the accused. 11 Cr. L. J. 594=8 Ind. Cas. 220.

500. Whoever defames another shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Cases.—Witnesses as a class are not exempt from the protection from the operation of s. 499, in respect of defamatory statements, simply because they have made them in judicial proceedings. 31 P. W. R. 1912 Cr.=13 Ind. Cas. 494=13 Cr. L. J. 494=244 P. L. R. 1912. The defendant in proceedings for defamation, whether in a civil suit or under s. 500, Penal Code, must for defence depend upon the face of each particular case which the defendant is certain can be proved by him or his witnesses. If there is no substantial defence, an immediate apology in the widest and most unreserved terms may fairly be presumed to decrease the damages and lessen the punishment under s. 500, Penal Code. 26 A. L. J. 509=A. I. R. 1928 All. 321. The first step that a complainant must take for commencing a prosecution or a civil suit for defamatory publication is to satisfy the Court that he is the person aimed at by the article. 26 A. L. J. 509. An editor should be most watchful not to publish defamatory attacks upon individuals unless he first takes reasonable pains to ascertain that there are strong and cogent grounds for believing the information, which is sent to him, to be true. Ibid. Publication of a defamatory matter is actionable. 26 A. L. J. 509. Statements made in the course of judicial proceedings are absolutely privileged. Information or a report made to the Police does not come within this principle. A report made at a police station though not within the rule of absolute privilege which covers judicial proceedings, is prima facie privileged, that is to say, the person making it has a right to make it if he honestly believes it, and the person receiving it has a duty to receive it. 1923 All. 167. A defamatory statement made in the presence of a number of persons does cease to be such merely because the accused had been challenged by the complainant to make it. 92 Ind. Cas. 694=A. I. R. 1926 All. 237. Where the complainant was invited by the accused to a feast at the latter's house long with a number of people but when he sat down to dinner he was asked by the accused to leave the place; held, that although the conduct of the accused was reprehensible from a social point of view, there was no imputation made against the reputation of the complainant and therefore there was no offence within the meaning of s. 500. A. I. R. 1926 All. 711. A party who gives evidence on his own behalf in a judicial proceeding may be prosecuted for any defamatory statement made in the course of his evidence under s. 500, I. P. Code. Such a person may plead the ninth exception to s. 499 in defence. 4 Bur. L. J. 181=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 360. A charge under this section can be framed by the Magistrate when the facts stated in the complaint justifies that. 26 P. L. R. 552. Imputation by a member of a caste that another member of the same caste is unfit for association constitutes an offence under this section when there is no decision of the Panchayat to that effect. L. R. 6 All. 207 Cr. There is no absolute privilege in respect of statements made in Court. The accused must show that the imputations were made in good faith and for his own protection. This is a matter of evidence. 35 C. L. J. 527=1922 Cal. 76. Where a woman laid a report at the Police Station that she was raped by some persons who were not named and she gave their names only subsequently in the complaint filed in court and the charge was found to be false and the persons charged filed a complaint against the woman for defamation: Held that what she was doing was not defaming these persons but bringing a possibly false charge against them. If her complaint was a false one, her object in making it was not to defame these persons so much as to harass them and cause them the inconvenience of being subject to criminal proceedings. For such an offence s. 211 Penal Code is the appropriate section, and Magistrate must comply with section 195, Cr. Pro. Code. A. I. R. 1935 Rang. 163.

A person calling another a badmash and a baiman is guilty of an offence under s. 504 I. P. Code and not under s. 500 I. P. Code. 51 P. L. R. 1222=4 Lah. L. J. 408. Where a number of persons, professing a particular faith met together and resolved for proper reasons not to associate with a person ex-communicated by their religious head and sent a copy of the resolution to the person in question it does not amount to defamation. 66 Ind. Statements resulting from action taken under ss. 154 and 155 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the course of information given to a police officer are privileged and cannot be made the foundation of a charge of defamation. 41 A. 311=17 A. L. J. 414=49 Ind. Cas. 855. To say of a person that he makes gifts to certain funds not out of charity but from self-advantage is defamatory if the words used incite public contempt and ridicule. 43 Ind. Cas. 417=19 Cr. L. J. 129. Where defamatory words are not addressed in the course of a quarrel and which are calculated to have the reputation of the complainant, an offence under this section has been committed. 16 A. L. J. 498. A witness who being actuated by malicious motives makes a voluntary and irrelevant statement not elicited by any question put to him while under examination to injure the reputation of another, commits an offence punishable under s. 500. 105 Ind. Cas. 820=28 Cr. L. J. 996=A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 58. Every publication or circulation of Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

Charge.—Where charge of defamation was clear and unambiguous and the accused was not liable to be misled, the accused was held to be in no way prejudiced even though the charge did not contain the exact words of defamation. 501. Whoever prints or engraves any matter, knowing or having good reason to believe that such matter is defamatory of any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—A Criminal Court is not competent to amend or alter a complaint under s. 501, Penal Code, to one under s. 500. 18 P. R. 1889 Cr.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

502. Whoever sells or offers for sale any printed or engraved substance containing defamatory matter, knowing that it contains such matter, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Publication of a defamatory rumour is an offence under this section. 26 A. L. J. 509. Malicious publication in the sense of active ill-will against the person defamed is not a necessary constituent of the offence of defamation. 26 A. L. J. 509=A. I. R. 1928 All. 321.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

CHAPTER XXII.

OF CRIMINAL INTIMIDATION, INSULT, AND ANNOYANCE.

503. Whoever threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation, or property, or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested, with intent to cause alarm to that person, or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which that person is legally entitled to do, as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat, commits criminal intimidation.

Explanation.—A threat to injure the reputation of any deceased person in whom the person threatened is interested is within this section.

Illustration.

A, for the purpose of inducing B to desist from prosecuting a civil suit, threatens to burn B's house. A is guilty of criminal intimidation.

Chapter XXII.—This Chapter is in some sort supplementary to the Chapter of Defamation. An imputation which is not defamatory under the definitions explanations and exceptions in that Chapter may, under certain circumstances, be punishable on other grounds. For example, an imputation which is insulting though not defamatory, may be uttered in the hearing of the person who is the object of it, for the purpose of provoking that person to break the public peace. If so, it is punishable under section 504. "There are many cases in which it is fit that unpleasant truth should be told respecting an individual. But there is no case in which it is desirable that such truth should be told in such a way that the telling of it is gross personal outrage. A person who has detected or thinks that he has detected, a dishonest misrepresentation in a book, has a right to expose it publicly. But he cannot be allowed to intrude into the presence of the author of the book, and to tell him to his face that he is a liar. A person who knows the mistress of a female school to be a woman of infamous character, deserves well of society if he states what he knows. But he cannot be allowed to follow her through the streets calling her by opprobrious names, though he may be able to prove that all those names were merited. A person who brings to notice the malversation of a public functionary deserves applause. But a person who hangs a public functionary in effigy at that functionary's door, with an opprobrious label, does what cannot be permitted, even though every word on the label, and every imputation which the exhibition was meant to convey, may be perfectly true."—Morgan and Macpherson, 449.

Scope.—Where the threats are intended to put a person in fear and thereby to dishonestly induce a person to deliver property, they may amount to offences punishable under sections 385 or 389. Such threats as the following would fall within the present definition—Threats to a person or to his child, wife, relative etc.—Threats to cause mischief on property or to kill or wound any animal which is property, or to commit the offence of house-breaking, or to commit any mischief or trespass by means of a riotous or unlawful assembly, threats to impute unnatural lust to a person, etc.

The threat must be made either with intent to cause alarm to the person threatened or to overcome his free will and to induce him to do or omit to do something which he is not legally bound to do or omit. The question whether the threat amounts to a criminal intimidation or not does not depend on the nerves of the individual threatened; if it is such a threat as may overcome the free will of a firm man, or whatever the nature of the threat, if it is made with the intention mentioned in the section, it is an offence. A threat of a trivial kind, calculated perhaps to give pain, but not to cause alarm, will probably be deemed to fall within the exception in section 95. If the intention of the person threatening is to cause the person threatened to do an act which he is bound to do, such as to pay a just debt or demand, it may nevertheless amount to criminal intimidation if the intention is to cause alarm to that person by a threat of injury.—Morgan and Macpherson, 450. In order to constitute the offence of criminal intimidation, the harm threatened must be illegal. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. p. 359. A threat will not amount to an offence unless made with intent to cause alarm to the complainant. 2 Bom. L. R. 55. There can be no criminal intimidation where the injury of which complaint is made is the hardship arising from conventional punishment which a spiritual superior, acting in the exercise of his authority as regulated by the custom of the caste is competent to inflict. 6 M. 681; see also 1933 M. W. N. 736. The offence seems to require both a person to be threatened and another in whom he is specially interested. Then there must be the intent to cause alarm to the former by a threat to him of injury to the latter. 11 B. 376. The gist of the offence is the effect which the threat is intended to have upon the mind of the person threatened and is equally clear that, before it can have any effect upon the mind, it must be either made to him by the person threatening or communicated to him in some way. In other words it must be a threat communicated or uttered with intention of its being communicated to the person threatened for the purpose of influencing the man's mind. 15 C. 671. An advice given to others not to trade with a particular individual is indeed an injurious act. But it is no threat and the harm caused is only to his opportunities of future gain and not to property already possessed by him. S. C. 146 Oudh. Where the accused, Musalmans, threatened the Hindu population (1) to obstruct and stop the Hindu religious procession; (2) to commit a riot, (3) to do that in or by which people might happen to be killed. Held that such a threat was one contemplated by s. 503 I. P. Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 273. Where the accused threatened the complainant that he would get him imprisoned for six months if he continued to detain his adult sister in his house held, that this did not amount to the offence of criminal intimidation. 8 B. H. C. Cr. 101. The words "threatened another" in s. 503 show that the threat must be made to the complainant personally, or, if made to a third person, must be made with intent that he should communicate to the complainant. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 50. Where a person complains to a Magistrate that he is threatened with an illegal sentence of excommunication, which will at least injure his reputation unless he abstains from acts which he is legally entitled to do, the allegation, if established, might constitute the offence of criminal intimidation. 8 M. 140=2 Weir 249. The accused told the complainant, a member of their caste, that he should give up his field or else they would put him out of caste. Held that this did not amount to criminal intimidation within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, the injury threatened not falling within the definition contained in s. 44 of the Penal Code. Rat. Un Cr. C. 27.

A threat to commit suicide, if another person refuse to do a particular act, is not criminal intimidation unless the person be interested in the person making the threat. 109 P. R. 1866 Cr. There must be a threat to another person of injury to his person, reputation, or property, or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested. 30 C. 418=7 C. W. N. 116. Where a Municipal Commissioner threatens a butcher that, if he bought a cow, he would have him sent to jail and that he would make it impossible for him to continue to live in the town. Held that the use of the words did constitute criminal intimidation as defined in s. 503=102 Ind. Cas. 557=28 Cr. L. J. 589=8 A. I. R. Cr. R. 148. The words of this section seem to imply that the threat must be one which can be put into execution by the person threatening. It is not necessary that the injury should be one to be inflicted by the offender; it is sufficient if he can cause it to be inflicted by another, and the infliction of it could be avoided by some act or omission that the person threatening desires. 48 M. 774=21 L. W. 174=48 M. L. J. 190. A treat by a President of a self-constituted arbitration Court is a threat of harm to an individual in his person, reputation or property and it is immaterial that the tribunal is incompetent to execute its own decree. 37 C. L. J. 526=27 C. W. N. 479=72 Ind. Cas. 508. The accused demanded of the complainant certain property of theirs in the possession of the latter and used threats. Held, the offence of criminal intimidation was complete even if the object of getting possession was not achieved. 21 A. L. J. 877.

504. Whoever intentionally insults, and thereby gives provocation to, any person, intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause him to break the public peace, or to commit any other offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The insults, however deliberate and intentional, are only punishable as offences when they are intended to provoke a breach of the peace or an affray (Section 159). The Court must be satisfied not merely that there has been intentional insult and provocation, but also that the offender gave the provocation intending or knowing it to be likely that it would cause a breach of the peace. Ordinarily such an intention may be inferred from the circumstances attending the insult. The offence is not made to depend upon the sensitive feelings or excitable temper of the person insulted, but on the intention or knowledge of the offender—Morgan and Macpherson, 450. An offence under this section may be committed, although the person, to whom the insult is directly offered, is not a person likely to be provoked to commit a breach of the peace; and an offence may be committed under this section although the person likely to be provoked to commit a breach of the peace is not in fact provoked. 1 Weir 622. To charge a person with an offence is sufficient. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. I, 220. It is sufficient for the prosecution to prove that the abusive language used is ordinarily sufficient to provoke a man of his position and character to commit a breach of the peace. 1 Weir 620; U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 67; see also 11 Mys. L. J. 167. The essence of the offence consists in the effect which it is likely to produce upon the person to whom the provocation is addressed, not upon any other person who may come to know it. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 360. An assault causing a breach of peace may be of spoken words only or of conduct or actions of men. 18 Cr. L. J. 463=1 Pat. L. W. 536=39 Ind. Cas. 303. "Under s. 504 there must be an intentional insult. When the charge is of an insult by words, the words must amount to something more than what in English law is called 'mere vulgar abuse.'" Per Beaumont C. J. in 56 B. 196=34 Bom. L. R. 282=33 Cr.

L. J. 463=A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 193. But in the same case Bromfield J. said: "Words which do not amount to more than vulgar abuse may nevertheless amount to an insult within the meaning of s. 504. Provocation of complainant is not essential. Intentional use of provocation and abusive language is enough. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 480=1932 Cr. C. 618=33 P. L. R. 695=33 Cr. L. J. 548=138 Ind. Cas. 120. Section 504 provides a remedy for abusive and insulting language and it requires an intention to insult and thereby to give provocation to the person insulted and an intention that such provocation should cause or the knowledge that, that provocation is likely to cause the person so insulted to break the public peace or commit any other offence. A. I. R. 1935 Sind. 107. There is nothing in this section which confines the insult to spoken words and would not cover words written in a letter. A person is within the ambit of the section not only if the provocation offered by him is of such a character as to cause the person provoked to commit a breach of the peace but even if it is of such a nature as to cause him to commit any other offence. 32 Bom. L. R. 103. A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 120=1930 Cr. C. 195. Mere abuse unaccompanied by an intention to cause a breach of the peace or knowledge that a breach of the peace is likely does not come within s. 504. Ibid. In dealing with his section of the Court has not to judge the temperament or the idiosyncrasies of the individual concerned. It should try to find out what in the ordinary circumstances would have been the effect of the abusive language used. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 344. An insult is no less intentional because it is incidental to another insult or even to another statement or proceedings which is not insulting. But to insult another intentionally is not an offence punishable under s. 504 I. P. Code unless the offender intends by that insult to provoke the other person into breaking the peace by assaulting him or getting him assaulted or reviling him in loud and angry tones or in any other way or at least knows that such a disturbance is a probable result 7 N. L. J. 124=81 Ind. Cas. 903. Where the affair is a trivial one a conviction under this section is not proper. 4 Lah. L. J. 230=65 Ind. Cas. 635. Under this section, it is necessary that the insult should have been intentionally caused, and thereby provocation given within the intention or knowledge that such provocation was likely to cause the person provoked to break the public peace or to commit any other offence. 18 A. L. J. 515=56 Ind. Cas. 435=21 Cr. L. J. 451.

To constitute an offence under this section, it is sufficient if the insult is of a kind calculated to cause the other party to lose his temper and say or do something violent. The public peace can be broken by angry words as well as by deeds. 4 Bom. L. R. 71. 10 M. 353=1 Weir 620; 1 Weir 621. In an offence under this section fine should be imposed. 11 Ind. Cas. 619. When a person pulls a Mahomedan by his beard in a public place he intentionally insults him and is guilty of an offence under this section. 23 A. L. J. 73=86 Ind. Cas. 79=26 Cr. L. J. 202. When the failure of a Magistrate to specifically mention the objectionable words in the charge has caused no prejudice to the accused, conviction is not bad. 104 Ind. Cas. 437=28 Cr. L. J. 821=A. I. The provocation need not be likely to cause a breach of the peace. 99 Ind. Cas. 604=28 Cr. L. J. 172. Insult may be inferred from tone and manner of spoken words and consists in provoking the person insulted though he might not commit a breach of peace. 36 Ind. Cas. 849=21 C. W. N. 95=18 Cr. L. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Statements conducting to public mischief. 505. Whoever makes, publishes, or circulates any statement, rumour, or report,—

(a) with intent to cause, or which is likely to cause, any officer, soldier, sailor or airman in the army, navy or air force of Her

- Majesty,* or in the Imperial Service Troops, to mutiny, or otherwise disregard or fail in his duty as such ; or
- (b) with intent to cause, or which is likely to cause, fear or alarm to the public, or to any section of the public, whereby any person may be induced to commit an offence against the State or against the public tranquility ; or
 - (c) with intent to incite, or which is likely to incite, any class or community of persons to commit any offence against any other class or community ;

shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Exception.—It does not amount to an offence, within the meaning of this section, when the person making, publishing, or circulating any such statement, rumour, or report, has reasonable grounds for believing that such statement, rumour, or report is true and makes, publishes, or circulates it without any such intent as aforesaid.

Legislative Notes.—This section has been substituted by Act 4 of 1898.

Scope.—The statement, rumour or report, whether it is circulated or made public by words, by writings or by signals or otherwise, if it is known by the person who publishes it to be false and if it is intended to cause mutiny (See Chapter VII of offences relating to the Army and Navy is punishable as an offence under this section. It is also punishable if it is intended to cause fear or alarm to the public, or to any class of the public, or any community (See Section 12) and thereby to induce any person to commit any offence within the sixth or eighth chapter of this Code. Morgan and Macpherson, 451. The mere causing of fear of alarm to the public or to a section of the public does not constitute an offence under this section ; but it is necessary that the fear or alarm should be caused in such circumstances as to render it likely that a person may be induced to commit an offence against the state or against the public tranquility. Account cannot be taken of a vague possibility that the state of mind which is caused by alarm may easily induce a person to commit an offence against the public tranquility. 3 C. W. N. 1.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

506. Whoever commits the offence of criminal intimidation shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both ;

and if the threat be to cause death or grievous hurt, or to cause the destruction of any property by fire, or to cause an offence punishable with death or transportation, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, or to impute unchastity to a woman, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—If the Criminal intimidation is aggravated by a threat of injury of the kind here mentioned, an increased punishment may be awarded. The offences which are punishable with death or transportation, or with imprisonment for seven years, are mentioned in different sections—Morgan and Macpherson, 452. To constitute an offence under this section, it must be shown that the person charged actually threatened another with injury to his person, reputation or property, or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested, with intent to cause harm. 45 P. R. 1882 Cr. ; see also A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 196=27 S. L. R. 214=145 Ind. Cas. 136=34 Cr. L. J. 711. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class. If the threat be to cause death or grievous hurt, etc.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

507. Whoever commits the offence of criminal intimidation by an anonymous communication, or having taken an anonymous communication precaution to conceal the name or abode of the person from whom the threat comes, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, in addition to the punishment provided for the offence by the last preceding section.

Scope.—If the criminal intimidation is by an anonymous letter, or by a letter signed with a false name, and the letter is dropped on a road or is intended to be put in a place where it is likely to be seen and read by the person for whom it is intended, or to be found by some other person who it is expected will forward it to the person for whom it is intended, the offence will be subject to punishment under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson 452. The punishment provided in this section cannot be awarded until there has been a conviction under s. 506. 99 P. R. 1886. Cr.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

508. Whoever voluntarily causes or attempts to cause any person to do anything which that person is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do anything which he is legally entitled to do, by inducing or attempting to induce that person to believe that he will be rendered an object of Divine displeasure, if he does so, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, in addition to the punishment provided for the offence by the last preceding section.

by inducing or attempting to induce that person to believe that he or any person in whom he is interested will become or will be rendered by some act of the offender an object of Divine displeasure if he does not do the thing which it is the object of the offender to cause him to do, or if he does the thing which it is the object of the offender to cause him to omit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Illustrations.

(a) A sits dharna at Z's door with the intention of causing it to be believed that, by so sitting he renders Z an object of Divine displeasure, A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A threatens Z that unless Z performs a certain act, A will kill one of A's own children under such circumstances that the killing would be believed to render Z an object of Divine displeasure. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—Where the accused voluntarily attempts to cause a person to omit to do what he is legally entitled to do, by attempting to induce the latter to believe that he would otherwise be rendered by an act of the accused an object of divine displeasure, the accused commits an offence under this section. Rat. Un Cr. C. 376. The words of this section seem to imply that the threat must be one which can be put into execution by the person threatening. 48 M. 774=86 Ind. Cas. 339=26 Cr. L. J. 755. To constitute an offence under this section it must be shown that the person accused of such offence threatened to do a future act or illegally to omit to do an act, and that by such threat he induced or attempted to induce the person threatened by that act or illegal omission, the person threatened or some one in whom the person threatened was interested, would become an object of Divine displeasure. 6 M. 381; see also A. W. N. 1886, 63.

Procedure.—Not cognizable.—Warrant.—Bailable.—Compoundable with Court's permission.—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

509. Whoever, intending to insult the modesty of any woman, utters any word, makes any sound or gesture, or exhibits any object, intending that such word or sound shall be heard, or that such gesture or object shall be seen, by such woman, or intrudes upon the privacy of such woman, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, with or both.

Scope.—A, intending to outrage the modesty of a woman, exposes his person indecently to her, or uses obscene words intending that she should hear them, or exhibits to her obscene drawing; A has committed this offence. If the intrusion upon the woman's privacy is by entering her house or rooms, etc., the offence may come within the definition of criminal trespass. (See section 441)—Morgan and Macpherson, 453. This section makes intention to insult the modesty of a woman the essential ingredient of the offence. 5 Bom. L. R. 502. To constitute an intrusion upon the privacy of a woman, an offence under this section, the intruder must be intending to insult the modesty of such woman. 6 P. R. 1892 Cr.; 86 Ind. Cas. 968. An offence under this section is made out when the accused writes a letter to the complainant containing indecent overtures. 82. Bom. L. R. 90=93 Ind. Cas. 247=27 Cr. L. J. 455=50 B. 246. In order to justify conviction under this section the modesty of some particular woman must have been outraged. 19 S. L. R. 87.

510. Whoever, in a state of intoxication, appears in any public place, or in any place which it is a trespass in him to enter, and there conducts himself in such a manner as to cause annoyance to any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to twenty-four hours, or with fine which may extend to ten rupees, or with both.

Scope.—Mere intoxication is not punishable. But if a person appears in a public place, as in a street, in a public assembly, in a railway carriage, etc., in a state of intoxication, or if in such a state, he intrudes into a private house or into any other place, where he has not a right to go, and thereby (it may be unintentionally), causes annoyance, he commits the offence here made punishable. A person whether drunk or sober who trespasses on property with intent to insult or annoy any person in possession of such property, commits "criminal trespass" and may be punished for that offence (see sections 441, 447).—Morgan and Macpherson, 454.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

CHAPTER XXIII

OF ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT OFFENCES.

Punishment for attempting to commit offences punishable with transportation or imprisonment.

511. Whoever attempts to commit an offence punishable by this Code with transportation or imprisonment, or to cause such an offence to be committed, and in such attempt does any act towards the commission of the offence, shall, where no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such attempt, be punished with transportation or imprisonment of any description provided for the offence for a term of transportation or imprisonment which may extend to one-half of the longest term provided for that offence, or with such fine as is provided for the offence, or with both.

Illustrations.

(a) A makes an attempt to steal some jewels by breaking open a box, and finds, after so opening the box, that there is no jewel in it. He has done an act towards the commission of theft, and therefore is guilty under this section.

(b) A makes an attempt to pick the pocket of Z by thrusting his hand into Z's pocket. A fails in the attempt in consequence of Z's having nothing in his pocket. A is guilty under this section.

Application.—This chapter applies to offences punishable under ss. 121 A, 294 A and 304 A—Vide Act 27 of 1875 s. 13.

Attempt.—The illustrations above given are cases of attempts in which the offence contemplated cannot be committed (the box or pocket being empty), but the act done towards the commission has been carried to such a length as the offender considered sufficient to effect his purpose. He has used all such exertions for the purpose in view as he would have used if he had been successful, but he was foiled by something not dependent on his own will. It is the same as if he had fired a loaded gun at a man intending to murder him, but had missed his aim. The words "does any act towards the commission of the offence" may well include act less near to the consummation of the offence than those just mentioned. But these words must not, it seems, be construed to include all acts however remote which tend towards the commission of the offence. The thing done may be too small or it may proceed too short a way towards the accomplishment of the offence for the law to notice it as an attempt. The following are illustrations of this (see section 307).—

A, intending to murder Z, buys a gun for the purpose of loading it and firing at Z.

A, intending to murder Z by poison, purchases poison and has it in his possession.

A intending to commit a murder, is seen to walk towards the place of the contemplated murder.

Such acts are in themselves ambiguous, and are not so immediately connected with the offence as to make the doers punishable under this section.

It is impossible to lay down a clear rule on such a subject, or to define what is such an act done in furtherance of a criminal intent as will constitute an attempt. As it has been said, acts remotely tending towards the commission of an offence are not, it seems, sufficient to bring a case within this section. On the other hand acts immediately and necessarily connected with the commission of the offence, and which constitute a commencement of execution of the offence, not being completed only because the offender is hindered by circumstances independent of his will, as by seizure by the police, etc., are attempts.

The Court should be satisfied that the offender had in his mind the design to commit a certain offence, and that he had begun to move towards an execution of his purpose; there must also be proof of some act, of an ambiguous kind, but directly approximating to the commission of the offence. When the offender's design is made manifest by any act, it becomes an attempt cognizable as an offence punishable under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson, 456. An attempt is an intentional preparatory action which, fails in object, which so fails through circumstances independent of the person who seeks its accomplishment. In other words, when a man does an intentional act with a view to attain a certain end, and fails in his object through circumstances independent of his own will then that man has attempted to effect the object at which he aimed. 26 Cr. L. J. 1424=89 Ind. Cas. 848. A greater degree of determination distinguishes an attempt to commit an offence from a mere preparation. S. C. 76 Oudh. Fraudulently obtaining signature slip is no offence under section 171 (f). read with s. 511. 26 Cr. L. J. 359=A. I. R. 1925 All. 226. Under the Penal Code all that is necessary to constitute an attempt to commit an offence is some external act, something tangible and ostensible, of which the law can take hold as an act showing progress towards the actual commission of the offence. It does not matter that the purpose was interrupted. 103 Inl. Cas. 408=28 Cr. L. J. 680. An attempt to commit an offence is punishable under this section though the final act short of actual commission of that offence has not been accomplished. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 551=10 Lah. 253=30 P. L. R. 405=110 Ind. Cas. 812.

A person cannot be convicted of attempting to commit an offence, unless the offence would have been committed had the attempt proved successful. 22 C. 131. An attempt is an intentional preparatory action which fails in object which so fails through circumstances independent of the person who seeks its accomplishment. 2 Bom. L. R. 286; 2 Bom. L. R. 304; 7 C. 352=8 C. L. R. 572. The term "attempt" indicates the actual taking of those steps which lead immediately to the commission of the offence although nothing be done, or omitted, which of itself is a necessary constituent of the offence attempted. 4 N. W. P. 46. In order to constitute an attempt, there must be an intention to commit a particular crime, a commencement of the commission, and an act done towards the commission. The act of raising a knife in a threatening attitude manifesting an intention to stab, but without actually trying to stab the complainant, falls short of an attempt to stab. 1 L. B. R. 264. When once a proposal has been made for the payment of an illegal gratification whether it is completed by agreement or not, the offence of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 215 is complete. 2 L. B. R. 310. It is now settled law that an attempt is possible even when the offence attempted cannot be committed. 5 N. L. J. 16.

Scope.—This section does not relate only to the penultimate act, but to all preceding acts if they were done with intent to commit or facilitate the commission of the act. 15 A. 173; 25 B. 90=2 Bom. L. R. 653; 15 A. 178. This section which relates to attempts to commit offences, is confined to attempts to commit offences punishable under the Code. 1 Weir 624; but see 40 M. 34=35 Ind. Cas. 497; A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 507=1932 M. W. N. 545=33 Cr. L. J. 582.

Preparation.—Between the preparation for the attempt and the attempt itself, there is a wide difference. The preparation consists in devising or arranging means or measures necessary for the commission of the offence; the attempt is the direct movement towards the commission after preparations are made. The law allows a locus penitentia and will not hold that a person has attempted a crime, until he has passed beyond the stage of preparation. 3 M. 4=1 Weir 543; 65 Ind. Cas. 492=23 Cr. L. J. 108. There is a distinction between the commission of an offence, the attempt to commit it and a preparation to commit it. Preparation, or providing an opportunity to commit an offence, is a stage of the proceeding short of attempt, and is not punishable. 7 P. L. R. 1903=25 P. R. 1902 Cr. The real difficulty in distinguishing between preparation and attempt arises in determining where a given act or set of acts passes from the former stage into the latter whether the commission of an offence requires the performance of a series of acts and the person commences this series with a view to carry it out to its completion, he has in the language of s. 511 I. P. Code done an act towards the commission of the offence in the attempt to commit the offence. 5 N. L. J. 16=65 Ind. Cas. 994=23 Cr. L. J. 210; see also 7 P. L. R. 1903=25 P. R. 1902 Cr.; 24 B. 287. Although the provisions of this section extend to a much wider range of cases than would be deemed punishable under the English law, they would not extend to make punishable as attempts acts done in the mere stage of preparation. Although such acts done towards the commission of the offence, they are not done in the attempt to commit the offence. The term "attempt" indicates the actual taking of those steps which lead immediately to the commission of the offence, although nothing be done or omitted, which of itself is a necessary constituent of the offence attempted. 4 N. W. P. 46; see also 28 P. L. R. 575=28 Cr. L. J. 663=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 580=103 Ind. Cas. 199. Assistance in the preparation of an offence which was not committed cannot amount to an abetment or attempt. A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 158=25 Cr. L. J. 1162=110. L. J. 640=81 Ind. Cas. 986. Preparation to commit an offence and an attempt are distinct; if the actual transaction has commenced and would have ended in a crime, if not interrupted, there is an attempt. 18 P. R. 1868 Cr. Preparation consists in devising means necessary for the commission of the offence. 65 Ind. Cas. 492. See also 1923 P. 307. An intent to commit an offence is not the same thing as an attempt to commit such an offence. Intent exists before attempt begins. A mere intent is not by itself an offence. 4 N. L. J. 245; 37 C. W. N. 1151. Except in very few offences preparation is not punishable. 18 A. L. J. 636=2 U. P. L. R. 296=21 Cr. L. J. 576=57 Ind. Cas. 96.

Or to cause such an offence to be committed.—A common form of attempt is the soliciting of another to commit an offence—as to incite a servant to steal this master's goods—to incite a person to commit murder or hurt,—to make overtures to another to commit an unnatural offence. The act done towards the commission of the offence may consist in such cases in the solicitation itself, or—if this should not be considered a sufficient act—in the offer of a bribe, or some such act of instigation. It will not affect the offence though the person solicited declines the persuasion. Attempts of this description will ordinarily amount to offences punishable under the chapter of abetment—Morgan and Macpherson 457.

For a term, etc.—In calculating this term when transportation for life is a punishment provided for the offence which has been attempted such transportation must be reckoned as equivalent to transportation for twenty years (see section 57). The Court may impose fine equal in amount to the fine provided for the offence, but where no sum is expressed to which the fine may extend, the amount must not be excessive. —Morgan and Macpherson, 457.

Section 75.—Section 75 does not apply to cases which are confined to this section. The offences, which come under this section must be punished entirely irrespective of s. 75. 17 A. 123. See also 21 W. R. 35 Cr.; 24 O. C. 260=22 Cr. L. J. 750.

Attempt to abet.—It is not legally impossible to attempt the abetment of an offence, which is provided for in s. 511. There is, therefore, no legal obstacle to punish such an offence. 49 P. R. 1887 Cr.; See also 20 P. R. 1885 Cr.

Section 307.—This section was not intended to exhaust all attempts to commit murder which could be punishable under the Code, but applies only to acts done which are capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of things, if the act took effect. In considering, however, an attempt under this section, it is necessary to see whether the causing of death was possible or not, if the act was completed. 4 B. H. C. 17.

Cases.—Where a person attempted fraudulently to obtain the duplicate of a University certificate, when he was not really entitled to it, held that his intention, if it would be so presumed, to use the certificate subsequently in order to obtain some temporary advantage by pretending that he has passed the Matriculation examination was a mere preparation not chargeable as an attempt to commit an offence within the meaning of s. 511 Penal Code. 25 M. 726=1 Weir 481=12 M. L. J. 68. The act of a milk-man in going in the direction of the place where the cows are about to be milked with about three gallons of stale milk in his possession, the milk being in a can similar to the cans in which cows are milked, amounts only to a preparation to adulterate the milk intended for sale as food or drink, but not to an attempt. 40 P. R. 1885 Cr. Where the accused was found with an open clash knife in his hands and two gunny bags, coming there for committing theft he could not be convicted under ss. 457 and 511 Penal Code but under s. 447 only. 20 Cr. L. J. 571=12 Bur. L. T. 222=52 Ind. Cas. 59.

Attempt to forgery.—Vide 16A. 409=A. W. N. 1894, 150.

Attempt to commit suicide.—A person cannot be convicted under section 309 for emasculating himself. 22 P. R. 1878 Cr.

Attempt to commit dacoity.—This section does not apply to a case of dacoity. 7 W. R. Cr. 48.

Attempt to commit house-breaking.—Removing some projecting tiles from the roof of a house is not a step towards committing house-breaking and consequently is not an attempt to commit house breaking. A. W. N. 1886, 290.

Attempt to commit adultery.—An opportunity made for sexual intercourse by a married woman going to the accused's shop, the object being frustrated by people following her and besieging the shop was held to be a mere preparation. 25 P. L. R. 1902 Cr.=7 P. L. R. 1903; see also 13 P. R. 1879 Cr.

Attempt at extortion.—Section 385 does not expressly provide for an attempt at extortion. Therefore a charge under s. 384 read with s. 511 is not bad. A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 89=27 Cr. L. J. 1244=98 Ind. Cas. 60.

Attempt to cheat.—In the offence of cheating the actual transaction must have begun before a preparation can be said to be an attempt. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 77=51 M. L. J. 635=28 Cr. L. J. 95=99 Ind. Cas. 127. Sending false papers as to quantity of paddy burnt amounts to an attempt to cheat. A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 241=2 Rang. 53=3 Bur. L. J. 1=25 Cr. L. J. 1175=82 Ind. Cas. 39. Proposal to recover lost property for consideration is an attempt. A. I. R. 1923 All. 83=45 A. 159=20 A. L. J. 927=25 Cr. L. J. 127=76 Ind. Cas. 191.

Attempt to commit rape.—Where the accused threw down a girl, put sand in her mouth and got on her chest to have intercourse with her but was prevented from doing so by arrival of other persons, his act amounted not only to preparation but to attempt to commit rape. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 1002=34 P. L. R. 832.

Administering harmless substance believing it to be poison.—An attempt to commit an offence, as defined in s. 511 I. P. Code means not merely an act with the intention to commit an offence which is unsuccessful because it would not possibly result in the completion of the offence, but an act done towards the commission of the offence, that is to say, the offence remains incomplete, only because something yet remains to be done, which the person intending to commit the offence is unable to do by reason of circumstances independent of his own volition. An action complete in itself and not constituting an offence did not constitute an attempt to commit an offence, e. g., as the administration of a harmless substance which the accused wrongly believed to be poison. 9 C. P. L. R. 14 Cr.

Procedure.—Cognizable or not—Warrant or the summons—Bailable or not—Compoundable or not—as in the offence attempted. Triable by the court by which the offence attempted is triable. If punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for 7 years or upwards—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. If punishable with imprisonment for 3 years and upwards, but less than 7 years—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable (except in cases under the Indian Arms Act, section 19, which shall be bailable)—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class. If punishable with imprisonment for one year and upwards but less than 3 years—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class. If punishable with imprisonment for less than one year, or with fine only—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

SUPPLEMENT TO N. D. BASU'S INDIAN PENAL CODE.

AMENDMENTS TO THE INDIAN PENAL CODE, 1872.

The Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

AT THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

THE 18TH DAY OF MARCH, 1937.

Present :

The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by section two hundred and ninety-three of the Government of India Act, 1935, (hereinafter in the recitals to this Order referred to as 'the Act') His Majesty is empowered by Order in Council to provide that as from such date as may be specified in the Order any law in force in British India or in any part of British India shall, until repealed or amended by a competent legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to such adaptations and modifications as appear to His Majesty to be necessary or expedient for bringing the provisions of that law into accord with the provisions of the Act :

And whereas a draft of this Order has been laid before Parliament in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section three hundred and nine of the Act and an Address has been presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament praying that an Order may be made in the terms of this Order :

Now, therefore, His Majesty, in the exercise of the said powers and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, is pleased by and with the advice of His Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and shall come into operation on the first day of April, nineteen hundred and thirty-seven.

2. (1) In this Order the expression 'Indian Law' means a law as defined in section two hundred and ninety-three of the Act.

(2) The Interpretation Act, 1889, applies for the interpretation of this Order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

3. The Indian laws mentioned in the Schedule to this Order shall, until repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to the adaptations and modifications directed by those Schedules to be made therein or, if it is so directed, shall cease to have effect.

4. (1) Whenever an expression mentioned in the first column of the Table hereinunder printed occurs (otherwise than in a title or preamble or in a citation or description of an enactment), in a Central or Provincial Act or Regulation, whether an Act or Regulation mentioned in the Schedules to this Order or not, then, unless that expression is by this Order expressly directed to be otherwise adapted or modified, or to stand unmodified or to be omitted, there shall be substituted therefor the expression set opposite to it in column two of the said table.

Table of General Adaptations.

Governor in Council : Governor (except in the expression "Governor's Province") : Lieutenant Governor in Council : Lieutenant Governor : Chief Commissioner (except in the expression "Chief Commissioner's Province") : Local Government : Local Administration.	} Provincial Government.
Gazette of India : local official Gazette : local Gazette : any other expression denoting a Gazette in which official notices of a government are published, not being the Gazette of a district or other sub-division of a Province.

Any reference to the Governor (or Lieutenant-Governor) of a named Province in Council shall be treated for the purposes of this paragraph as if it were a reference to the Governor (or Lieutenant Governor) in Council of that Province.

(2) A direction in the Schedules to this Order that a specified Indian law, or section or portion of an Indian law shall stand unmodified shall be construed merely as a direction that it is not to be modified or adapted in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this paragraph.

5. (1) Where this Order requires that in any specified Indian law, or in any section or other portion of an Indian law, certain words shall be substituted for certain other words or that certain words shall be omitted, that substitution or omission, as the case may be, shall, except where it is otherwise expressly provided, be made wherever the words referred to occur in that law or, as the case may be, in that section or portion.

(2) Where this Order requires that in any Indian law a plural noun shall be substituted for a singular noun and vice versa, or a masculine noun for a neuter noun or vice versa, there shall be made also in any verb or pronoun in the sentence in question such consequential amendment as the rules of Grammar may require.

6. (1) The following provisions shall have effect where any Indian law which under this Order is to be adapted or modified has before the commencement of this Order been amended, either generally or in relation to any particular area, by the insertion or omission of words, or the substitution of words for other words :—

(a) effect shall first be given in the amending law to any adaptation or modification required by paragraphs three and five of this order to be made therein ;

(b) the original law shall then be amended, either generally or, as the case may be, in its application to the particular area, so as to give effect to the directions contained in the amending law or, where any adaptation or modification has fallen to be made under sub-paragraph (a), in that law as so adapted or modified ; and

(c) all adaptations or modifications required by this Order to be made in the original law shall then be made in that law as so amended, except so far as in the case of any particular area they may be inapplicable.

(2) In this paragraph references to the amendment of a law by the insertion or omission of words or the substitution of words do not include references to an amendment which is effected merely by directing that certain words shall be construed in a particular manner.

7. Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Order, any reference by whatever form of words in any Indian law in force immediately before the commencement of this Order to an authority competent at the date of the passing of that law to exercise any powers or authorities, or discharge any functions, in any part of British India shall, where a corresponding new authority has been constituted by or under any Part of the Government of India Act, 1935, for the time being in force, have effect until duly repealed or amended as if it were a reference to that new authority.

8. In any Indian law in force immediately before the commencement of this Order any reference by name or description to any territory shall, unless the contrary intention appears or unless it has been, or is by this Order, otherwise expressly provided, be construed as a reference to the territory which bore that name or answered to that description at the date when the enactment containing that name or description came into operation :

Provided that in the application of any enactment to Madras, Bombay, Bihar or the Central Provinces, references in that enactment to Madras, Bombay, Bihar or the Central Provinces, as the case may be, shall be construed as exclusive of so much of those Provinces respectively as was separated therefrom on the constitution of the Provinces of Orissa and Sind.

9. The provisions of this Order which adopt or modify Indian laws so as to alter the manner in which, the authority by which, or the law under or in accordance with which, any powers are exercisable, shall not render invalid any notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule or regulation duly made or issued, or anything duly done, before the commencement of this Order ; and any such notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule, regulation or thing may be revoked, varied or undone in the like manner, to the like extent and in the like circumstances as if it had been made, issued or done after the commencement of this Order by the competent authority and under and in accordance with the provisions therein applicable to such a case.

10. Save as provided by this Order, all powers which under any law in force in British India, or in any part of British India, were immediately before the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935, vested in, or exercisable by, any person or authority shall continue to be so vested or exercisable until other provision is made by some legislature or authority empowered to regulate the matter in question.

11. Nothing in this Order shall affect the previous operation of, or anything duly done or suffered under, any Indian law, or any right, privilege, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred under any such law, or any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence already committed against any such law.

12. For the avoidance of doubt it is hereby declared that—

(a) nothing in this Order transferring or assigning any functions to the Central Government shall be construed as excluding those functions from the operation of section one hundred and twenty-three or section one hundred and twenty-four of the Government of India Act, 1935 ;

(b) the transfer by this Order to a Provincial Government of any jurisdiction theretofore exercisable by the Local Government of the Province shall not be construed as excluding that jurisdiction from the operation of sub-section (2) of section two hundred and ninety-six of the said Act ;

(c) nothing in this Order shall affect the provisions of any Order in Council for the time being in force made under section one hundred and fifty-eight, section one hundred and fifty-nine or section one hundred and sixty of the said Act (which empower Orders to be made regulating the relations of India and Burma as to their monetary systems, relief from double taxation, customs, and ancillary and related matters), or under any corresponding provisions in the Government of Burma Act, 1935 ; and

(d) no repeal effected by this Order shall affect the operation of subparagraph (2) of paragraph fifteen of the Government of India (Commencement and Transitory Provisions) Order, 1936.

THE GOVERNMENT OF BURMA (ADAPTATION OF LAWS) ORDER, 1937.

WHEREAS by section one hundred and forty-nine of the Government of Burma Act, 1935, His Majesty is empowered by order in Council to provide that, as from such date as may be specified in the order, any law in force in Burma shall, until repealed or amended by the Legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to such adaptations and modifications as appear to His Majesty to be consequential on the separation of India and Burma :

And whereas a draft of this order has been laid before Parliament in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section one hundred and fifty-seven of the said Act and an Address has been presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament praying that an order may be made in this terms of this order :

Now, therefore, His Majesty, in the exercise of power conferred on him as aforesaid and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, is pleased, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows :—

1. This Order may be cited as the Government of Burma (Adaptation of Laws) Order, 1937.

2. This Order shall come into operation on the separation of Burma and India.

3. (1) In this Order, 'Burman law' means a law as defined in section one hundred and forty-nine of the Government of Burma Act, 1935.

(2) The Interpretation Act, 1889, applies for the interpretation of this order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

4. (1) The enactments mentioned in the Schedule to this order shall, until repealed or amended by the Legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to the adaptations and modifications directed by that Schedule to be made therein or, where so directed, shall cease to have effect.

(2) Save as otherwise provided in that or in any other Burman law, every Burman law shall be deemed to have effect throughout the whole of British Burma.

5. (1) Whenever an expression mentioned in the first column of the Table here-in-under printed occurs (otherwise than in a title or preamble or in a citation or description of an enactment) in any Burman law then, unless that expression is under the last preceding paragraph expressly directed to be otherwise adapted or modified or to stand unmodified or to be omitted, there shall be substituted therefor the expression set opposite to it in the second column of the said Table.

(2) Any words contained in any Burman law, otherwise than in a title or preamble, which require the consent, assent, approval, sanction or control of the Governor-General or the Governor-General in Council in relation to anything done by the Local Government or the Governor shall be omitted.

(3) A direction in the Schedule to this order that a specified Burman law or section or portion of a Burman law shall stand unmodified shall be construed merely as a direction that it is not to be modified or adapted in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this paragraph.

6. Where this Order requires that in any specified Burman law or portion of a Burman law certain words shall be substituted for certain other words or that certain words shall be omitted, that substitution or omission, as the case may be, shall unless the contrary intention appears, be made wherever the words referred to occur in that law or that portion.

7. (1) Where any Burman law has before the commencement of this order been amended by the insertion or omission of words, or the substitution of words for other words, the adaptations and modifications directed to be made therein by this order shall be made in the enactment is in force at the commencement of this order, that is to say, as so amended :

Provided that nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as extending the operation of any temporary amending enactment.

(2) In this paragraph references to the amendment of law by the insertion or omission of words, or the substitution of words, do not include references to an amendment which is effected merely by directing that certain words shall be construed in a particular manner.

8. Where this order requires the substitution in any enactment of a plural noun for a singular noun or vice versa, or of a masculine noun for a neuter noun, or vice versa, or of a noun or adjective beginning with a consonant for a noun or adjective beginning with a vowel, or vice versa, there shall also be made in any verb, pronoun or article in the sentence in question such consequential amendment as the rules of Grammar may require.

9. The provisions of this order which adopt or modify any enactment so as to alter the manner in which, the authority by which, or the law in or in accordance with which, any powers are exercisable, shall not render invalid any notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule or regulation duly made or issued, or anything done before the commencement of this order ; and any such notification of order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule, regulation or thing may be revoked, varied or undone in the like manner, to the like extent and in the like circumstances as if it had been made, issued or done after the commencement of this order by the competent authority and under and in accordance with the provisions then applicable to such a case.

10. Nothing in this order shall affect the previous operation of, or anything duly done or suffered under, any Burman law, or any right, privilege, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred under any such law or any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence already committed against any such law.

11. Save as provided in this order, all powers which under any law in force in Burma or in any part of Burma were at the commencement of this order vested in or exercisable by any person or authority shall continue to be so vested or exercisable until other provision is made by the Legislature or by some authority empowered to regulate the matter in question.

12. (1) References in any Burman law to that or any other Burman law, or to any section or portion thereof, shall, except in so far as the contrary intention appears, be construed—

(a) as respects any period before the separation of India and Burma, as references to that law, section or portion as in force in all places to which it then extended, whether within or without Burma:

(b) as respects any period after the said separation as referencee to that law, section or portion as in force in Burma.

(2) The foregoing provisions of this paragraph extend to references to, or to any section or portion of, any Burman law by means of the short-title of the law, notwithstanding that the Schedule to this Order alters that short-title and notwithstanding that no consequential alteration is made in the reference.

13. For the avoidance of doubt it is hereby declared that nothing in this order shall affect the operation of sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph eleven of the Government of Burma (Commencement and Transitory Provisions) Order, 1935, or of any order in Council made under Part XI of the Government of Burma Act, 1935.
